

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

ALEXANDER POPE.

Satires, Epistles, and Odes of Horace,
IMITATED.

Ludentis speciem dabit, et torquebitur. HOR.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The occasion of publishing these Imitations was the clamour raised on some of my Epistles. An answer from Horace was both more full and of more dignity than any I could have made in my own person; and the example of much greater freedom in so eminent a divine as Dr. Donne, seemed a proof with what indignation and contempt a Christian may treat vice or folly, in ever so low or ever so high a station. Both these authors were acceptable to the princes and ministers under whom they lived. The satires of Dr. Donne I versified at the desire of the Earl of Oxford, while he was lord-treasurer, and of the Duke of Shrewsbury, who had been secretary of state; neither of whom looked upon a satire on vicious courts as any reflection on those they served in. And indeed there is not in the world a greater error than that which fools are so apt to fall into, and knaves with good reason to encourage,—the mistaking a satirist for a libeller; whereas to a true satirist nothing is so odious as a libeller: for the same reason as to a man truly virtuous, nothing is so hateful as a hypocrite.

Uni æquus virtuti atque ejus amicis.

BOOK II. SATIRE I.

To Mr. Fortescue.

P. THERE are, (I scarce can think it, but am told)
There are to whom my satire seems too bold;

Scarce to wise Peter complaisant enough,
 And something said of Chartres much too rough.
 The lines are weak, another's pleased to say;
 Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day.
 Timorous by nature, of the rich in awe,
 I come to counsel learned in the law:
 You'll give me, like a friend both sage and free,
 Advice; and (as you use) without a fee.

F. I'd write no more.

P. Not write? but then I think,
 And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink.
 I nod in company, I wake at night;
 Fools rush into my head, and so I write.

F. You could not do a worse thing for your life.
 Why, if the night seem tedious—take a wife:
 Or rather, truly, if your point be rest,
 Lettuce and cowslip wine: probatum est.
 But talk with Celsus, Celsus will advise
 Hartshorn, or something that shall close your eyes.
 Or if you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise;
 You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays.

P. What? like Sir Richard, rumbling, rough, and fierce,
 With arms, and George, and Brunswick, crowd
 the verse;

Rend with tremendous sound your ears asunder,
 With gun, drum, trumpet, blunderbuss, and thunder?
 Or, nobly wild, with Budgell's fire and force,
 Paint angels trembling round his falling horse?

F. Then all your Muse's softer art display,
 Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay;
 Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
 And sweetly flow through all the royal line.

P. Alas! few verses touch their nicer ear;
 They scarce can bear their laureat twice a year;

And justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays ;
It is to history he trusts for praise.

F. Better be Cibber, I'll maintain it still,
Than ridicule all taste, blaspheme quadrille,
Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
And laugh at peers that put their trust in Peter.
E'en those you touch not hate you.

P. What should ail 'em ?

F. A hundred smart in Timon and in Balaam :
The fewer still you name, you wound the more ;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

P. Each mortal has his pleasure : none deny
Scarsdale his bottle, Darty his ham-pie :
Ridotta sips and dances till she see
The doubling lustres dance as fast as she :
F— loves the senate, Hockley-hole his brother,
Like in all else, as one egg to another.
I love to pour out all myself as plain
As downright Shippen, or as old Montaigne :
In them, as certain to be loved as seen,
The soul stood forth, nor kept a thought within ;
In me what spots (for spots I have) appear,
Will prove at least the medium must be clear.
In this impartial glass my Muse intends
Fair to expose myself, my foes, my friends ;
Publish the present age ; but where my text
Is vice too high, reserve it for the next ;
My foes shall wish my life a longer date,
And every friend the less lament my fate.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse-man or prose-man, term me which you will,
Papist or Protestant, or both between,
Like good Erasmus, in an honest mean,
In moderation placing all my glory,
While Tories call me Whig, and Whigs a Tory.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a-muck, and tilt at all I meet;
I only wear it in a land of Hector's,
Thieves, supercargoes, sharpers, and directors.
Save but our army! and let Jove incrust
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust!
Peace is my dear delight—not Fleury's more;
But touch me, and no minister so sore.
Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, and hitches in a rhyme,
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burden of some merry song.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage;
Hard words or hanging if your judge be Page:
From furious Sappho scarce a milder fate,
Pox'd by her love, or libell'd by her hate.
Its proper power to hurt each creature feels;
Bulls aim their horns, and asses lift their heels;
'Tis a bear's talent not to kick, but hug;
And no man wonders he's not stung by pug.
So drink with Walters, or with Chartres eat,
They'll never poison you, they'll only cheat.

Then, learned sir! (to cut the matter short)
Whate'er my fate, or well or ill at court,
Whether old age, with faint but cheerful ray,
Attends to gild the evening of my day,
Or death's black wing already be display'd,
To wrap me in the universal shade;
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print.

F. Alas, young man, your days can ne'er belong;
In flower of age you perish for a song!

Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take your life.

P. What? arm'd for virtue when I point the pen,
Brand the bold front of shameless guilty men,
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car,
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;
Can there be wanting, to defend her cause,
Lights of the church or guardians of the laws?
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flatterers and bigots, e'en in Louis' reign?
Could laureat Dryden pimp and friar engage,
Yet neither Charles nor James be in a rage?
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplaced, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?
I will, or perish in the generous cause:
Hear this and tremble! you who scape the laws,
Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave:
To Virtue only and her friends a friend,
The world beside may murmur or commend.
Know, all the distant din that world can keep,
Rolls o'er my grotto, and but sooths my sleep.—

There my retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place:
There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl
The feast of reason and the flow of soul:
And he, whose lightning pierced the Iberian lines,
Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines;
Or tames the genius of the stubborn plain,
Almost as quickly as he conquer'd Spain.

Envy must own I live among the great,
No pimp of pleasure, and no spy of state,
With eyes that pry not, tongue that ne'er repeats,
Fond to spread friendships, but to cover heats;

To help who want, to forward who excel ;
 This all who know me, know ; who love me, tell ;
 And who unknown defame me, let them be
 Scribblers or peers, alike are mob to me.
 This is my plea, on this I rest my cause—
 What saith my counsel, learned in the laws ?

F. Your plea is good ; but still I say, beware !
 Laws are explain'd by men—so have a care.
 It stands on record, that in Richard's times
 A man was hang'd for very honest rhymes.
 Consult the statute ; quart. I think it is,
Edwardi sext. or prim. et quint. Eliz.
 See libels, satires—here you have it—read.

P. Libels and satires lawless things indeed !
 But grave epistles, bringing vice to light,
 Such as a king might read, a bishop write,
 Such as Sir Robert would approve—F. Indeed !
 The case is alter'd—you may then proceed :
 In such a cause the plaintiff will be hiss'd,
 My lords the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd.

BOOK II. SATIRE II.

To Mr. Bethel.

WHAT, and how great, the virtue and the art
 To live on little with a cheerful heart !
 (A doctrine sage, but truly none of mine)
 Let's talk, my friends, but talk before we dine ;
 Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
 Turns you from sound philosophy aside ;
 Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
 And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.

Hear Bethel's sermon, one not versed in schools,
But strong in sense, and wise without the rules.

'Go work, hunt, exercise ! (he thus began)
Then scorn a homely dinner if you can.
Your wine lock'd up, your butler stroll'd abroad,
Or fish denied (the river yet unthaw'd) ;
If then plain bread and milk will do the feat,
The pleasure lies in you, and not the meat.'

Preach as I please, I doubt our curious men
Will choose a pheasant still before a hen ;
Yet hens of Guinea full as good I hold,
Except you eat the feathers green and gold.
Of carps and mullets why prefer the great,
(Though cut in pieces ere my lord can eat)
Yet for small turbot's such esteem profess ?
Because God made these large, the other less.
Oldfield, with more than harpy-throat endued,
Cries, 'Send me, gods ! a whole hog barbecued !'
O blast it, south-winds ! till a stench exhale
Rank as the ripeness of a rabbit's tail.
By what criterion do you eat, d' ye think,
If this is prized for sweetness, that for stink ?
When the tired glutton labours through a treat,
He finds no relish in the sweetest meat ;
He calls for something bitter, something sour,
And the rich feast concludes extremely poor :
Cheap eggs, and herbs, and olives, still we see ;
Thus much is left of old simplicity !
The robin redbreast till of late had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest,
Till becaficos sold so devilish dear
To one that was, or would have been, a peer.
Let me extol a cat on oysters fed ;
I'll have a party at the Bedford-head :

Or e'en to crack live crawfish recommend ;
I'd never doubt at court to make a friend.
'Tis yet in vain, I own, to keep a pother
About one vice, and fall into the other :
Between excess and famine lies a mean ;
Plain, but not sordid, though not splendid, clean.

Avidien or his wife (no matter which,
For him you'll call a dog, and her a bitch)
Sell their presented partridges and fruits,
And humbly live on rabbits and on roots :
One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
And is at once their vinegar and wine :
But on some lucky day (as when they found
A lost bank-bill, or heard their son was drown'd)
At such a feast, old vinegar to spare,
Is what two souls so generous cannot bear :
Oil, though it stink, they drop by drop impart,
But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart.

He knows to live who keeps the middle state,
And neither leans on this side nor on that ;
Nor stops for one bad cork his butler's pay,
Swears, like Albutius, a good cook away ;
Nor lets, like Nævius, every error pass,
The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass.

Now hear what blessings temperance can bring :
(Thus said our friend, and what he said I sing)
First health : the stomach cramm'd from every dish,

A tomb of boil'd and roast, and flesh and fish,
Where bile, and wind, and phlegm, and acid, jar,
And all the man is one intestine war)
Remembers oft the schoolboy's simple fare,
The temperate sleeps, and spirits light as air.

How pale each worshipful and reverend guest
Rise from a clergy or a city feast !

What life in all that ample body say?
What heavenly particle inspires the clay?
The soul subsides, and wickedly inclines
To seem but mortal e'en in sound divines.

On morning wings how active springs the mind
That leaves the load of yesterday behind!
How easy every labour it pursues!
How coming to the poet every Muse!
Not but we may exceed some holy time,
Or tired in search of truth or search of rhyme:
Ill-health some just indulgence may engage,
And more the sickness of long life, old age:
For fainting age what cordial drop remains,
If our intemperate youth the vessel drains?

Our fathers praised rank venison. You suppose,
Perhaps, young men! our fathers had no nose.
Not so: a buck was then a week's repast,
And 'twas their point, I ween, to make it last;
More pleased to keep it till their friends could come,
Than eat the sweetest by themselves at home.
Why had not I in those good times my birth,
Ere coxcomb-pies or coxcombs were on earth?

Unworthy be the voice of Fame to hear,
That sweetest music to an honest ear,
(For 'faith, Lord Fanny! you are in the wrong,
The world's good word is better than a song)
Who has not learn'd fresh sturgeon and ham-pie
Are no rewards for want and infamy!
When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Cursed by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
To friends, to fortune, to mankind, a shame,
Think how posterity will treat thy name;
And buy a rope, that future times may tell
Thou hast at least bestow'd one penny well.

‘ Right, (cries his lordship) for a rogue in need
 To have a taste, is insolence indeed :
 In me ’tis noble, suits my birth and state,
 My wealth unwieldy, and my heap too great.’—
 Then, like the sun, let bounty spread her ray,
 And shine that superfluity away.
 Oh, impudence of wealth! with all thy store
 How darest thou let one worthy man be poor?
 Shall half the new-built churches round thee fall?
 Make quays, build bridges, or repair Whitehall;
 Or to thy country let that heap be lent,.
 As Mo’s was, but not at five per cent.

‘ Who thinks that Fortune cannot change her
 Prepares a dreadful jest for all mankind. [mind,
 And who stands safest? tell me, is it he
 That spreads and swells in puff’d prosperity,
 Or, bless’d with little, whose preventing care
 In peace provides fit arms against a war!’

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thought,
 And always thinks the very thing he ought;
 His equal mind I copy what I can,
 And, as I love, would imitate the man.
 In South-sea days, not happier, when surmised
 The lord of thousands, than if now excised;
 In forest planted by a father’s hand,
 Than in five acres now of rented land.
 Content with little, I can piddle here
 On brocoli and mutton round the year;
 But ancient friends (though poor or out of play)
 That touch my bell, I cannot turn away.
 ’Tis true, no turbot’s dignify my boards,
 But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords:

To Hounslow-heath I point, and Bansted-down, Thence comes your mutton, and these chicks my own:

From yon old walnut-tree a shower shall fall,
And grapes, long lingering on my only wall;
And figs from standard and espalier join;
The devil is in you if you cannot dine: [place)
Then cheerful healths, (your mistress shall have
And, what's more rare, a poet shall say grace.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double-tax'd, how little have I lost!
My life's amusements have been just the same,
Before and after standing armies came.
My lands are sold, my father's house is gone;
I'll hire another's; is not that my own, [gate
And yours, my friends? through whose free-opening
None comes too early, none departs too late:
For I, who hold sage Homer's rule the best,
Welcome the coming, speed the going guest.

'Pray Heaven it last! (cries Swift) as you go on;
I wish to God this house had been your own!
Pity! to build without a son or wife:
Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life.'
Well, if the use be mine, can it concern one
Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon?
What's property? dear Swift!—you see it alter
From you to me, from me to Peter Walter;
Or in a mortgage prove a lawyer's share,
Or in a jointure vanish from the heir;
Or in pure equity (the case not clear)
The chancery takes your rents for twenty year:
At best it falls to some ungracious son,
Who cries, 'My father's damn'd, and all's my Shades, that to Bacon could retreat afford, [own.'
Become the portion of a booby lord;

And Hemsley, once proud Buckingham's delight,
 Slides to a scrivener or a city-knight.
 Let lands and houses have what lords they will,
 Let us be fix'd, and our own masters still.

BOOK II. SATIRE VI.

THE FIRST PART IMITATED IN THE YEAR 1714, BY DR.
 SWIFT; THE LATTER PART ADDED AFTERWARDS.

I've often wish'd that I had clear
 For life six hundred pounds a year,
 A handsome house to lodge a friend,
 A river at my garden's end,
 A terrace-walk, and half a rood
 Of land set out to plant a wood.
 Well, now I have all this, and more,
 I ask not to increase my store ;
 But here a grievance seems to lie,
 All this is mine but till I die ;
 I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
 To me and to my heirs for ever.

If I ne'er got or lost a groat
 By any trick or any fault ;
 And if I pray by reason's rules,
 And not like forty other fools,
 As thus : ' Vouchsafe, O gracious Maker !
 To grant me this and t'other acre ;
 Or, if it be thy will and pleasure,
 Direct my plough to find a treasure ;
 But only what my station fits,
 And to be kept in my right wits,
 Preserve, almighty Providence !
 Just what you gave me, competence ;

And let me in these shades compose
Something in verse as true as prose,
Removed from all the' ambitious scene,
Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen.'

In short, I'm perfectly content,
Let me but live on this side Trent,
Nor cross the channel twice a year,
To spend six months with statesmen here.

I must by all means come to town,
'Tis for the service of the crown :
'Lewis, the Dean will be of use ;
Send for him up ; take no excuse.'

The toil, the danger of the seas,
Great ministers ne'er think of these ;
Or, let it cost five hundred pound,
No matter where the money's found,
It is but so much more in debt,
And that they ne'er consider'd yet.

'Good Mr. Dean, go change your gown,
Let my lord know you're come to town.'

I hurry me in haste away,
Not thinking it is levee-day,
And find his honour in a pound,
Hemm'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons blue and green :
How should I thrust myself between ?
Some wag observes me thus perplex'd,
And, smiling, whispers to the next,
'I thought the Dean had been too proud
To jostle here among a crowd.'

Another, in a surly fit,
Tells me I have more zeal than wit ;
'So eager to express your love,
You ne'er consider whom you shove.

But rudely press before a duke.
I own I'm pleased with this rebuke,
And take it kindly meant; to show
What I desire the world should know.

I get a whisper, and withdraw;
When twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Desiring I would stand their friend.

This humbly offers me his case—
That begs my interest for a place—
A hundred other men's affairs,
Like bees, are humming in my ears.
'To-morrow my appeal comes on;
Without your help the cause is gone.'—
'The duke expects my lord and you
About some great affair at two.'—
'Put my Lord Bolingbroke in mind
To get my warrant quickly sign'd:
Consider, 'tis my first request.'—
'Be satisfied, I'll do my best.'—
Then presently he falls to tease,
'You may for certain, if you please;
I doubt not, if his lordship knew—
And, Mr. Dean, one word from you.'—

'Tis (let me see) three years and more
(October next it will be four)

Since Harley bid me first attend,
And chose me for an humble friend;
Would take me in his coach to chat,
And question me of this and that;
As, 'What's o'clock?' and, 'How's the wind?'
'Whose chariot's that we left behind?'
Or gravely try to read the lines
Writ underneath the country signs;

Or, 'Have you nothing new to-day
From Pope, from Parnell, or from Gay?'
Such tattle often entertains
My lord and me as far as Staines,
As once a week we travel down
To Windsor, and again to town,
Where all that passes inter nos
Might be proclaim'd at Charing-cross.

Yet some I know with envy swell
Because they see me used so well.
'How think you of our friend the Dean?
I wonder what some people mean;
My lord and he are grown so great,
Always together tête à tête.
What! they admire him for his jokes—
See but the fortune of some folks!
There flies about a strange report
Of some express arrived at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechised in every street.

'You, Mr. Dean, frequent the great,
Inform us, will the emperor treat?
Or do the prints and papers lie?'
'Faith, sir, you know as much as I.'
'Ah! doctor, how you love to jest!
'Tis now no secret.'—'I protest
'Tis one to me.'—'Then tell us, pray,
When are the troops to have their pay?'
And though I solemnly declare
I know no more than my lord-mayor,
They stand amazed, and think me grown
The closest mortal ever known.

Thus in a sea of folly toss'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost;

Yet always wishing to retreat :
O, could I see my country-seat!
There, leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book,
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town.
O charming noon! and nights divine!
Or when I sup, or when I dine,
My friends above, my folks below,
Chatting and laughing all-a-row,
The beans and bacon set before them,
The grace-cup served with all decorum;
Each willing to be pleased, and please,
And e'en the very dogs at ease!
Here no man prates of idle things,
How this or that Italian sings,
A neighbour's madness, or his spouse's,
Or what's in either of the houses;
But something much more our concern,
And quite a scandal not to learn;
Which is the happier or the wiser,
A man of merit, or a miser?
Whether we ought to choose our friends
For their own worth or our own ends?
What good, or better, we may call,
And what the very best of all?

Our friend Dan Prior told (you know)
A tale extremely à-propos :
Name a town life, and in a trice
He had a story of two mice.
Once on a time (so runs the fable)
A country mouse, right hospitable,
Received a town mouse at his board,
Just as a farmer might a lord.

A frugal mouse, upon the whole,
 Yet loved his friend, and had a soul;
 Knew what was handsome, and would do't,
 On just occasion, coûte qui coûte.
 He brought him bacon, (nothing lean)
 Pudding that might have pleased a dean;
 Cheese, such as men in Suffolk make,
 But wish'd it Stilton for his sake:
 Yet, to his guest though no way sparing,
 He ate himself the rind and paring,
 Our courtier scarce could touch a bit,
 But show'd his breeding and his wit;
 He did his best to seem to eat,
 And cry'd, 'I vow you're mighty neat;
 But, lord, my friend, this savage scene!
 For God's sake, come and live with men:
 Consider, mice, like men, must die,
 Both small and great, both you and I;
 Then spend your life in joy and sport
 (This doctrine, friend, I learn'd at court).'

The veriest hermit in the nation
 May yield, God knows, to strong temptation.
 Away they came, through thick and thin,
 To a tall house near Lincoln's Inn
 ('Twas on the night of a debate,
 When all their lordships had sat late).

Behold the place, where if a poet
 Shined in description he might show it;
 Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,
 And tips with silver all the walls;
 Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
 Grottesco roofs, and stucco floors:
 But let it (in a word) be said,
 The moon was up, and men a-bed,
 The napkins white, the carpet red:

The guests withdrawn, had left the treat,
And down the mice sat tête à tête.

Our courtier walks from dish to dish,
Tastes for his friend of fowl and fish;
Tells all their names, lays down the law,
'Que ça est bon! Ah, goutez ça!
That jelly's rich, this Malmsey healing,
Pray, dip your whiskers and your tail in.'
Was ever such a happy swain!
He stuffs and swills, and stuffs again.
'I'm quite ashamed—'tis mighty rude
To eat so much—but all's so good—
I have a thousand thanks to give—
My lord alone knows how to live.'
No sooner said, but from the hall
Rush chaplain, butler, dogs, and all:
'A rat, a rat! clap to the door'—
The cat comes bouncing on the floor.
O for the art of Homer's mice,
Or gods to save them in a trice!
(It was by Providence they think,
For your damn'd stucco has no chink)
'An't please your honour, (quoth the peasant)
This same desert is not so pleasant:
Give me again my hollow tree,
A crust of bread and liberty!'

BOOK I. EPISTLE I.

To Lord Bolingbroke.

ST. JOHN, whose love indulged my labours past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last!
Why will you break the sabbath of my days?
Now sick alike of envy and of praise.

Public too long, ah! let me hide my age:
 See modest Cibber now has left the stage:
 Our generals now, retired to their estates,
 Hang their old trophies o'er the garden gates;
 In life's cool evening satiate of applause,
 Nor fond of bleeding e'en in Brunswick's cause.

A voice there is, that whispers in my ear ('Tis Reason's voice, which sometimes one can hear), [breath,
 'Friend Pope! be prudent, let your Muse take
 And never gallop Pegasus to death;
 Lest stiff and stately, void of fire or force,
 You limp, like Blackmore on a lord-mayor's horse.'

Farewell then verse, and love, and every toy,
 The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
 What right, what true, what fit, we justly call,
 Let this be all my care—for this is all;
 To lay this harvest up, and hoard with haste
 What every day will want, and most the last.

But ask not to what doctors I apply?
 Sworn to no master, of no sect am I:
 As drives the storm, at any door I knock,
 And house with Montaigne now, or now with Locke.
 Sometimes a patriot, active in debate,
 Mix with the world, and battle for the state;
 Free as young Lyttelton her cause pursue,
 Still true to virtue, and as warm as true:
 Sometimes with Aristippus or Saint Paul,
 Indulge my candour, and grow all to all;
 Back to my native moderation slide,
 And win my way by yielding to the tide.

Long as to him who works for debt the day,
 Long as the night to her whose love's away,
 Long as the year's dull circle seems to run
 When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one;

So slow the' unprofitable moments roll
That lock up all the functions of my soul,
That keep me from myself, and still delay
Life's instant business to a future day ;
That task which, as we follow or despise,
The eldest is a fool, the youngest wise ;
Which done, the poorest can no wants endure ;
And which not done, the richest must be poor.

Late as it is, I put myself to school,
And feel some comfort not to be a fool.
Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite,
I'll do what Mead and Cheselden advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.
Not to go back is somewhat to advance,
And men must walk, at least, before they dance.

Say, does thy blood rebel, thy bosom move
With wretched avarice, or as wretched love ?
Know there are words and spells which can control
Between the fits, this fever of the soul ;
Know there are rhymes which, fresh and fresh ap-
Will cure the arrant'st puppy of his pride. [plied,
Be furious, envious, slothful, mad, or drunk,
Slave to a wife, or vassal to a punk,
A Switz, a High Dutch or a Low Dutch bear ;
All that we ask is but a patient ear.

'Tis the first virtue vices to abhor,
And the first wisdom to be fool no more :
But to the world no bugbear is so great
As want of figure and a small estate.
To either India see the merchant fly,
Scared at the spectre of pale poverty !
See him with pains of body, pangs of soul,
Burn through the tropic, freeze beneath the pole !

Wilt thou do nothing for a nobler end,
Nothing to make philosophy thy friend?
To stop thy foolish views, thy long desires,
And ease thy heart of all that it admires?
Here Wisdom calls, 'Seek virtue first, be bold!
As gold to silver, virtue is to gold.'
There, London's voice, 'Get money, money still!
And then let Virtue follow, if she will.'
This, this the saving doctrine preach'd to all,
From low Saint James's up to high Saint Paul;
From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.

Barnard in spirit, sense, and truth, abounds;
'Pray then what wants he?' Fourscore thousand
A pension, or such harness for a slave [pounds;
As Bug now has, and Dorimant would have.
Barnard! thou art a cit, with all thy worth;
But Bug and D*1, their honours! and so forth.

Yet every child another song will sing,
'Virtue, brave boys! 'tis virtue makes a king.'
True conscious honour is to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without that's innocent within:
Be this thy screen, and this thy wall of brass;
Compared to this a minister's an ass.

And say, to which shall our applause belong,
This new court jargon, or the good old song?
The modern language of corrupted peers,
Or what was spoke at Cressy and Poitiers?
Who counsels best? who whispers, 'Be but great,
With praise or infamy leave that to Fate;
Get place and wealth, if possible, with grace;
If not, by any means get wealth and place.'
For what? to have a box where eunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a king;

Or he, who bids thee face with steady view
Proud Fortune, and look shallow Greatness through,

And, while he bids thee, sets the' example too ?
If such a doctrine in Saint James's air, [stare ;
Should chance to make the well-dress'd rabble
If honest Sz take scandal at a spark
That less admires the palace than the park ;
Faith, I shall give the answer Reynard gave :
' I cannot like, dread sir ! your royal cave ;
Because I see, by all the tracks about,
Full many a beast goes in, but none come out.'
Adieu to virtue, if you're once a slave :
Send her to court, you send her to her grave.

Well, if a king's a lion, at the least
The people are a many-headed beast :
Can they direct what measures to pursue
Who know themselves so little what to do ?
Alike in nothing but one lust of gold,
Just half the land would buy, and half be sold :
Their country's wealth our mightier misers drain,
Or cross, to plunder provinces, the main ;
The rest, some farm the poor-box, some the pews ;
Some keep assemblies, and would keep the stewes ;
Some with fat bucks on childless dotards fawn ;
Some win rich widows by their chine and brawn ;
While with the silent growth of ten per cent.
In dirt and darkness hundreds stink content.

Of all these ways, if each pursues his own,
Satire ! be kind, and let the wretch alone ;
But show me one, who has it in his power
To act consistent with himself an hour.
Sir Job sail'd forth, the evening bright and still,
' No place on earth (he cried) like Greenwich-hill ?'

Up starts a palace ; lo, the obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace,
The silver Thames reflects its marble face.
Now let some whimsey, or that devil within Which guides all those who know not what they mean,

But give the knight (or give his lady) spleen ;
' Away, away ! take all your scaffolds down,
For snug's the word : my dear ! we 'll live in town.'

At amorous Flavio is the stocking thrown ?—
That very night he longs to lie alone.
The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr.
Did ever Proteus, Merlin, any witch,
Transform themselves so strangely as the rich ?—
Well, but the poor—the poor have the same itch ;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes,
Discharge their garrets, move their beds, and run
(They know not whither) in a chaise and one ;
They hire their sculler, and when once aboard
Grow sick, and damn the climate—like a lord.

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand,
My wig all powder, and all snuff my band ;
You laugh if coat and breeches strangely vary,
White gloves, and linen worthy Lady Mary !
But when no prelate's lawn, with hair-shirt lined,
Is half so incoherent as my mind,
When (each opinion with the next at strife,
One ebb and flow of follies all my life)
I plant, root up ; I build, and then confound ;
Turn round to square, and square again to round
You never change one muscle of your face,
You think this madness but a common case ;

Nor once to Chancery nor to Hale apply,
 Yet hang your lip to see a seam awry !
 Careless how ill I with myself agree,
 Kind to my dress, my figure,—not to me.
 Is this my guide, philosopher, and friend ?
 This he who loves me, and who ought to mend ?
 Who ought to make me (what he can, or none)
 That man divine whom wisdom calls her own ;
 Great without title, without fortune bless'd ;
 Rich e'en when plunder'd, honour'd while oppress'd ;
 Loved without youth, and follow'd without power,
 At home though exiled ; free though in the Tower ;
 In short, that reasoning, high, immortal thing,
 Just less than Jove, and much above a king ;
 Nay, half in Heaven—except (what's mighty odd
 A fit of vapours clouds this demi-god.

BOOK I. EPISTLE IV¹.

A MODERN IMITATION.

SAY, St. John, who alone peruse
 With candid eye, the mimic Muse,
 What schemes of politics, or laws,
 In Gallic lands the patriot draws !
 Is then a greater work in hand,
 Than all the tomes of Haines's band ?

¹ This satire on Lord Bolingbroke, and the praise bestowed on him in a letter to Mr. Richardson, where Mr. Pope says,

The sons shall blush their fathers were his foes ;
 being so contradictory, probably occasioned the former to be suppressed.

' Or shoots he folly as it flies ?
Or catches manners as they rise ?
Or, urged by unquench'd native heat,
Does St. John Greenwich sports repeat ?
Where (emulous of Chartres' fame)
E'en Chartres' self is scarce a name.

To you (the' all-envied gift of Heaven)
The' indulgent gods, unask'd, have given
A form complete in every part,
And, to enjoy that gift, the art.
What could a tender mother's care
Wish better to her favourite heir,
Than wit, and fame, and lucky hours,
A stock of health, and golden showers,
And graceful fluency of speech,
Precepts before unknown to teach ?

Amidst thy various ebbs of fear,
And gleaming hope, and black despair ;
Yet let thy friend this truth impart ;
A truth I tell with bleeding heart,
(In justice for your labours past)
That every day shall be your last ;
That every hour you life renew
Is to your injured country due.

In spite of fears, of mercy spite,
My genius still must rail, and write.
Haste to thy Twickenham's safe retreat,
And mingle with the grumbling great :
There, half devour'd by spleen, you'll find
The rhyming bubbler of mankind ;
There (objects of our mutual hate)
We'll ridicule both church and state.

BOOK I. EPISTLE VI.

To Mr. Murray.

(AFTERWARDS EARL OF MANSFIELD.)

‘ Not to admire, is all the art I know,
To make men happy, and to keep them so.’
(Plain truth, dear Murray ! needs no flowers of speech,

So take it in the very words of Creech.)

This vault of air, this congregated ball,
Self-centred sun, and stars that rise and fall,
There are, my friend ! whose philosophic eyes
Look through, and trust the Ruler with his skies ;
To him commit the hour, the day, the year,
And view this dreadful all—without a fear.

Admire we then what earth’s low entrails hold,
Arabian shores, or Indian seas infold ;
All the mad trade of fools and slaves for gold ?
Or popularity ? or stars and strings ?

The mob’s applauses, or the gifts of kings ?
Say with what eyes we ought at courts to gaze,
And pay the great our homage of amaze ?

If weak the pleasure that from these can spring,
The fear to want them is as weak a thing :
Whether we dread, or whether we desire,
In either case, believe me, we admire :
Whether we joy or grieve, the same the curse,
Surprised at better, or surprised at worse.
Thus good or bad, to one extreme betray
The’ unbalanced mind, and snatch the man away ;

For Virtue's self may too much zeal be had ;
The worst of madmen is a saint run mad.

Go then, and if you can, admire the state
Of beaming diamonds and reflected plate ;
Procure a taste to double the surprise,
And gaze on Parian charms with learned eyes ;
Be struck with bright brocade on Tyrian dye,
Our birth-day nobles' splendid livery.
If not so pleased, at council-board rejoice
To see their judgments hang upon thy voice ;
From morn to night, at senate, rolls, and hall,
Plead much, read more, dine late, or not at all.
But wherefore all this labour, all this strife ?
For fame, for riches, for a noble wife ?
Shall one whom nature, learning, birth, conspired
To form, not to admire, but be admired,
Sigh while his Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dulness of some son of earth ?
Yet Time ennobles or degrades each line ;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine.
And what is fame ? the meanest have their day ;
The greatest can but blaze, and pass away.
Graced as thou art with all the power of words,
So known, so honour'd, at the house of lords ;
Conspicuous scene ! another yet is nigh,
(More silent far) where kings and poets lie ;
Where Murray (long enough his country's pride)
Shall be no more than Tully or than Hyde !
Rack'd with sciatics, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone ?
See Ward, by batter'd beaux invited over,
And desperate misery lays hold on Dover.
The case is easier in the mind's disease ;
There all men may be cured whene'er they please.

Would ye be bless'd? despise low joys, low gains ;
Disdain whatever Cornbury disdains ;
Be virtuous, and be happy for your pains.

But art thou one whom new opinions sway,
One who believes as Tindal leads the way,
Who virtue and a church alike disowns,
Thinks that but words, and this but brick and stones ?
Fly then on all the wings of wild desire,
Admire whate'er the maddest can admire.
Is wealth thy passion ? hence ! from pole to pole,
Where winds can carry, or where waves can roll ;
For Indian spices, for Peruvian gold,
Prevent the greedy, and outbid the bold ;
Advance the golden mountain to the skies ;
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise ;
Add one round hundred, and (if that's not fair)
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square :
For, mark the' advantage ; just so many score
Will gain a wife with half as many more,
Procure her beauty, make that beauty chaste,
And then such friends—as cannot fail to last.
A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth ;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth.
(Believe me many a German prince is worse,
Who proud of pedigree is poor of purse.)
His wealth brave Timon gloriously confounds ;
Ask'd for a groat, he gives a hundred pounds ;
Or if three ladies like a luckless play,
Takes the whole house upon the poet's day.
Now, in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed :
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves ;

Something which for your honour they may cheat,
 And which it much becomes you to forget.
 If wealth alone then make and keep us bless'd,
 Still, still be getting; never, never rest.

But if to power and place your passion lie,
 If in the pomp of life consist the joy;
 Then hire a slave, or (if you will) a lord,
 To do the honours, and to give the word;
 Tell at your levee, as the crowds approach,
 To whom to nod, whom take into your coach,
 Whom honour with your hand; to make remarks,
 Who rules in Cornwall, or who rules in Berks:
 'This may be troublesome, is near the chair;
 That makes three members, this can choose a mayor.'

Instructed thus, you bow, embrace, protest,
 Adopt him son, or cousin, at the least,
 Then turn about, and laugh at your own jest.

Or if your life be one continued treat,
 If to live well means nothing but to eat;
 Up, up! cries Gluttony, 'tis break of day,
 Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey:
 With hounds and horns go hunt an appetite—
 So Russel did, but could not eat at night;
 Call'd happy dog the beggar at his door,
 And envied thirst and hunger to the poor.

Or shall we every decency confound, [round?
 Through taverns, stews, and bagnios, take our
 Go dine with Chartres, in each vice outdo
 Kl's lewd cargo, or Tyy's crew;
 From Latian sirens, French Circæan feasts,
 Return'd well travell'd, and transform'd to beasts;
 Or for a titled punk or foreign flame
 Renounce our country, and degrade our name?

If, after all, we must with Wilmot ' own
 The cordial drop of life is love alone;
 And Swift cry wisely, Vive la bagatelle!
 The man that loves and laughs must sure do well.
 Adieu—if this advice appear the worst,
 E'en take the counsel which I gave you first:
 Or better precepts if you can impart;
 Why do; I'll follow them with all my heart.

BOOK I. EPISTLE VII.

IN THE MANNER OF DR. SWIFT.

'Tis true, my lord, I gave my word
 I would be with you June the third;
 Changed it to August, and (in short)
 Have kept it—as you do at court.
 You humour me when I am sick,
 Why not when I am splenetic?
 In town what objects could I meet?
 The shops shut up in every street,
 And funerals blackening all the doors,
 And yet more melancholy whores:
 And what a dust in every place?
 And a thin court that wants your face,
 And fevers raging up and down,
 And W* and H both in town!
 ' The dog days are no more the case.'
 'Tis true, but winter comes apace:
 Then southward let your bard retire,
 Hold out some months 'twixt sun and fire;

And you shall see, the first warm weather,
Me and the butterflies together.

My lord, your favours well I know ;
'Tis with distinction you bestow,
And not to every one that comes,
Just as a Scotsman does his plums.
' Pray take them, sir—enough's a feast :
Eat some, and pocket up the rest'—
What, rob your boys ? those pretty rogues ;
' No, sir, you'll leave them to the hogs.'
Thus fools with compliments besiege ye,
Contriving never to oblige ye,
Scatter your favours on a fop,
Ingratitude's the certain crop ;
And 'tis but just, I'll tell you wherefore :
You give the things you never care for.
A wise man always is or should
Be mighty ready to do good ;
But makes a difference in his thought
Betwixt a guinea and a groat.

Now this I'll say, you'll find in me
A safe companion, and a free ;
But if you'd have me always near—
A word, pray, in your honour's ear :
I hope it is your resolution
To give me back my constitution,
The sprightly wit, the lively eye,
The engaging smile, the gaiety
That laugh'd down many a summer sun,
And kept you up so oft till one ;
And all that voluntary vein,
As when Belinda raised my strain.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink,

But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in ;
Which one belonging to the house
('Twas not a man, it was a mouse,)
Observing, cried, ' You scape not so ;
Lean as you came, sir, you must go.'

Sir, you may spare your application,
I'm no such beast, nor his relation,
Nor one that temperance advance,
Cramm'd to the throat with ortolans ;
Extremely ready to resign
All that may make me none of mine.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
Leave me but liberty and ease.
'Twas what I said to Craggs and Child,
Who praised my modesty, and smiled.
' Give me, I cried, (enough for me)
My bread and independency !'
So bought an annual rent or two,
And lived—just as you see I do ;
Near fifty, and without a wife,
I trust that sinking fund, my life.
Can I retrench ? Yes, mighty well,
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house with trees a-row,
And, like its master, very low ;
There died my father, no man's debtor,
And there I'll die, nor worse nor better.

To set this matter full before ye,
Our old friend Swift will tell his story.
' Harley, the nation's great support'—
But you may read it, I stop short.

BOOK II. EPISTLE I.

 Advertisement.

The reflections of Horace, and the judgments passed in his epistle to Augustus, seemed so seasonable to the present times, that I could not help applying them to the use of my own country. The author thought them considerable enough to address them to his prince, whom he paints with all the great and good qualities of a monarch upon whom the Romans depended for the increase of an absolute empire: but to make the poem entirely English, I was willing to add one or two of those which contribute to the happiness of a free people, and are more consistent with the welfare of our neighbours.

This epistle will show the learned world to have fallen into two mistakes: one, that Augustus was a patron of poets in general; whereas he not only prohibited all but the best writers to name him, but recommended that care even to the civil magistrate; Admonebat prætores, ne paterentur nomen suum obsolescere, &c.; the other, that this piece was only a general discourse of poetry; whereas it was an apology for the poets, in order to render Augustus more their patron. Horace here pleads the cause of his contemporaries; first, against the taste of the town, whose humour it was to magnify the authors of the preceding age; secondly, against the court and nobility, who encouraged only the writers for the theatre; and, lastly, against the emperor himself, who had conceived them of little use to the government. He shows (by a view of the progress of learning, and the change of taste among the Romans,) that the introduction of the polite arts of Greece had given the writers of his time great advantages over their predecessors; that their morals were much improved, and the license of those ancient poets restrained; that satire and comedy were become more just and useful; that whatever extravagances were left on the stage were owing to the ill taste of the nobility; that poets, under due regulations, were in many respects useful to the state; and concludes, that it was upon them the emperor himself must depend for his fame with posterity.

We may further learn from this epistle, that Horace made his court to this great prince, by writing with a decent freedom towards him, with a just contempt of his low flatterers, and with a manly regard to his own character.

To Augustus.

WHILE you, great patron of mankind ! sustain
The balanced world, and open all the main ;
Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend,
At home with morals, arts, and laws amend ;
How shall the Muse, from such a monarch, steal
An hour, and not defraud the public weal ?

Edward and Henry, now the boast of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name,
After a life of generous toils endured,
The Gaul subdued, or property secured,
Ambition humbled, mighty cities storm'd,
Or laws establish'd, and the world reform'd ;
Closed their long glories with a sigh, to find
The' unwilling gratitude of base mankind !
All human virtue, to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquer'd but by Death.
The great Alcides, every labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last :
Sure fate of all, beneath whose rising ray
Each star of meaner merit fades away !
Oppress'd we feel the beam directly beat ;
Those suns of glory please not till they set.

To these the world its present homage pays,
The harvest early, but mature the praise :
Great friend of liberty ! in kings a name
Above all Greek, above all Roman fame ;

Whose word is truth, as sacred and revered
As Heaven's own oracles from altars heard.
Wonder of kings ! like whom, to mortal eyes,
None e'er has risen, and none e'er shall rise.

Just in one instance, be it yet confess'd
Your people, sir, are partial in the rest ;
Foes to all living worth, except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone.
Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old ;
It is the rust we value, not the gold.
Chancer's worst ribaldry is learn'd by rote,
And beastly Skelton heads of houses quote.
One likes no language but the Faery Queene ;
A Scot will fight for Christ's Kirk o' the Green ;
And each true Briton is to Ben so civil,
He swears the Muses met him at the Devil.

Though justly Greece her eldest sons admires,
Why should not we be wiser than our sires ?
In every public virtue we excel,
We build, we paint, we sing, we dance, as well ;
And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop.

If time improve our wit as well as wine,
Say at what age a poet grows divine ?
Shall we, or shall we not, account him so
Who died, perhaps, a hundred years ago ?
End all dispute ; and fix the year precise
When British bards began to immortalize ?

' Who lasts a century can have no flaw ;
I hold that wit a classic, good in law.'

Suppose he wants a year, will you compound ?
And shall we deem him ancient, right, and sound,
Or damn to all eternity at once
At ninety-nine a modern and a dunce ?

‘ We shall not quarrel for a year or two ;
By courtesy of England he may do.’

Then by the rule that made the horse-tail bare,
I pluck out year by year, as hair by hair,
And melt down ancients like a heap of snow,
While you, to measure merits, look in Stowe,
And estimating authors by the year,
Bestow a garland only on a bier.

Shakspeare (whom you and every playhouse bill Style the divine ! the matchless ! what you will,)
For gain, not glory, wing’d his roving flight,
And grew immortal in his own despite.
Ben, old and poor, as little seem’d to heed
The life to come in every poet’s creed.
Who now reads Cowley ? if he pleases yet,
His moral pleases, not his pointed wit :
Forgot his Epic, nay Pindaric art,
But still I love the language of his heart.

‘ Yet surely, surely these were famous men !
What boy but hears the sayings of old Ben ?
In all debates where critics bear a part,
Not one but nods, and talks of Jonson’s art,
Of Shakspeare’s nature, and of Cowley’s wit ;
How Beaumont’s judgment check’d what Fletcher
How Shadwell hasty, Wycherley wasslow ; [writ ;
But for the passions, Southern, sure, and Rowe !
These, only these, support the crowded stage,
From eldest Heywood down to Cibber’s age.’

All this may be ; the people’s voice is odd ;
It is, and it is not, the voice of God.
To Gammer Gurton if it give the bays,
And yet deny the Careless Husband praise,
Or say our fathers never broke a rule ;
Why then, I say, the public is a fool.

But let them own that greater faults than we
They had, and greater virtues, I'll agree.
Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet;
Milton's strong pinion now not Heaven can bound,
Now, serpent-like, in prose he sweeps the ground;
In quibbles angel and archangel join,
And God the Father turns a school-divine.
Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook;
Or damn all Shakspeare, like the' affected fool
At court, who hates whate'er he read at school.

But for the wits of either Charles's days,
The mob of gentlemen who wrote with ease;
Sprat, Carew, Sedley, and a hundred more,
(Like twinkling stars the miscellanies o'er)
One simile that solitary shines
In the dry desert of a thousand lines,
Or lengthen'd thought, that gleams through many
Has sanctified whole poems for an age. [a page,
I lose my patience, and I own it too,
When works are censured, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
These fools demand not pardon, but applause.

On Avon's bank, where flowers eternal blow,
If I but ask if any weed can grow;
One tragic sentence if I dare deride,
Which Betterton's grave action dignified,
Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,
(Though but perhaps a muster-roll of names)
How will our fathers rise up in a rage,
And swear all shame is lost in George's age!
You'd think no fools disgraced the former reign,
Did not some grave examples yet remain,

Who scorn a lad should teach his father skill,
And having once been wrong will be so still.
He who, to seem more deep than you or I,
Extols old bards, or Merlin's prophecy,
Mistake him not; he envies, not admires,
And, to debase the sons, exalts the sires.
Had ancient times conspired to disallow
What then was new, what had been ancient now?
Or what remain'd, so worthy to be read
By learned critics, of the mighty dead?

In days of ease, when now the weary sword
Was sheath'd, and luxury with Charles restored;
In every taste of foreign courts improved,
' All by the king's example lived and loved.'
Then peers grew proud in horsemanship to' excel,
Newmarket's glory rose, as Britain's fell;
The soldier breathed the gallantries of France,
And every flowery courtier writ romance.
Then marble, soften'd into life, grew warm,
And yielding metal flow'd to human form:
Lely on animated canvass stole
The sleepy eye, that spoke the melting soul.
No wonder then, when all was love and sport,
The willing Muses were debauch'd at court;
On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat.

But Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away.
Now whig, now tory, what we loved we hate;
Now all for pleasure, now for church and state;
Now for prerogatives, and now for laws;
Effects unhappy! from a noble cause.

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
His servants up, and rise by five o'clock;

Instruct his family in every rule,
And send his wife to church, his son to school.
To worship like his fathers was his care;
To teach their frugal virtues to his heir;
To prove that luxury could never hold,
And place on good security his gold.
Now times are changed, and one poetic itch
Has seized the court and city, poor and rich;
Sons, sires, and grandsires, all will wear the bays;
Our wives read Milton; and our daughters, plays;
To theatres and to rehearsals throng,
And all our grace at table is a song.
I, who so oft renounce the Muses' lie,
Not * * 's self e'er tells more fibs than I.
When sick of Muse our follies we deplore,
And promise our best friends to rhyme no more;
We wake next morning in a raging fit,
And call for pen and ink to show our wit.

He served a prenticeship who sets up shop;
Ward tried on puppies and the poor, his drop;
E'en Radcliffe's doctors travel first to France,
Nor dare to practise till they've learn'd to dance.
Who builds a bridge, that never drove a pile?
(Should Ripley venture, all the world should smile)
But those who cannot write, and those who can,
All rhyme, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man.

Yet, sir, reflect: the mischief is not great;
These madmen never hurt the church or state:
Sometimes the folly benefits mankind,
And rarely avarice taints the tuneful mind.
Allow him but his plaything of a pen,
He ne'er rebels, or plots, like other men:
Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind,
And knows no losses while the Muse is kind.

To cheat a friend or ward, he leaves to Peter;
The good man heaps up nothing but mere metre,
Enjoys his garden and his book in quiet;
And then,—a perfect hermit in his diet.

Of little use the man you may suppose
Who says in verse what others say in prose;
Yet let me show a poet's of some weight,
And (though no soldier) useful to the state.
What will a child learn sooner than a song?
What better teach a foreigner the tongue?
What's long or short, each accent where to place,
And speak in public with some sort of grace?
I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
Unless he praise some monster of a king;
Or virtue or religion turn to sport,
To please a lewd or unbelieving court.
Unhappy Dryden!—In all Charles's days
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
And in our own (excuse some courtly stains)
No whiter page than Addison's remains:
He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;
Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart!
Let Ireland tell how wit upheld her cause,
Her trade supported, and supplied her laws,
And leave on Swift this grateful verse engraved,
'The rights a court attack'd, a poet saved.'
Behold the hand that wrought a nation's cure,
Stretch'd to relieve the idiot and the poor;
Proud vice to brand, or injured worth adorn,
And stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.
Not but there are, who merit other palms;
Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms;

The boys and girls whom charity maintains
 Implore your help in these pathetic strains :
 How could devotion touch the country pews
 Unless the gods bestow'd a proper Muse ?
 Verse cheers their leisure, verse assists their work,
 Verse prays for peace, or sings down pope and Turk.

The silenced preacher yields to potent strain,
 And feels that grace his prayer besought in vain ;
 The blessing thrills through all the labouring throng,
 And Heaven is won by violence of song.

Our rural ancestors, with little bless'd,
 Patient of labour when the end was rest,
 Indulged the day that housed their annual grain
 With feasts, and offerings, and a thankful strain :
 The joy their wives, their sons, and servants, share,
 Ease of their toil and partners of their care :
 The laugh, the jest, attendants on the bowl,
 Smooth'd every brow, and open'd every soul :
 With growing years the pleasing licence grew,
 And taunts alternate innocently flew.
 But times corrupt, and Nature ill-inclined,
 Produced the point that left a sting behind ;
 Till friend with friend, and families at strife,
 Triumphant malice raged through private life.
 Who felt the wrong, or fear'd it, took the' alarm,
 Appeal'd to law, and Justice lent her arm.
 At length by wholesome dread of statutes bound,
 The poets learn'd to please, and not to wound :
 Most warp'd to flattery's side ; but some, more nice,
 Preserved the freedom, and forbore the vice.
 Hence satire rose, that just the medium hit,
 And heals with morals what it hurts with wit.
 We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's charms ;
 Her arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms ;

Britain to soft refinements less a foe,
 Wit grew polite, and numbers learn'd to flow.
 Waller was smooth; but Dryden taught to join
 The varying verse, the full-resounding line,
 The long majestic march, and energy divine :
 Though still some traces of our rustic vein
 And splay-foot verse remain'd, and will remain.
 Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
 When the tired nation breathed from civil war.
 Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
 Show'd us that France had something to admire.
 Not but the tragic spirit was our own,
 And full in Shakspeare, fair in Otway, shone ;
 But Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
 And fluent Shakspeare scarce effaced a line.
 E'en copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
 The last and greatest art,—the art to blot.

Some doubt if equal pains or equal fire
 The humbler Muse of comedy require,
 But in known images of life I guess
 The labour greater as the indulgence less.
 Observe how seldom e'en the best succeed :
 Tell me if Congreve's fools are fools indeed ?
 What pert low dialogue has Farquhar writ !
 How Van¹ wants grace, who never wanted wit !
 The stage how loosely does Astrea² tread,
 Who fairly puts all characters to bed !
 And idle Cibber, how he breaks the laws,
 To make poor Pinkey eat with vast applause !
 But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,
 Alike to them by pathos or by pun.

O you ! whom Vanity's light bark conveys
 On Fame's mad voyage by the wind of praise,

² Mrs. Behn.

With what a shifting gale your course you ply,
For ever sunk too low, or borne too high !
Who pants for glory finds but short repose ;
A breath revives him, or a breath o'erthrows.
Farewell the stage ! if just as thrives the play
The silly bard grows fat or falls away.

There still remains, to mortify a wit,
The many-headed monster of the pit ;
A senseless, worthless, and unhonour'd crowd,
Who, to disturb their betters mighty proud,
Clattering their sticks before ten lines are spoke,
Call for the farce, the bear, or the Black-joke.
What dear delight to Britons farce affords !
Ever the taste of mobs, but now of lords :
(Taste ! that eternal wanderer, which flies
From heads to ears, and now from ears to eyes,)
The play stands still ; damn action and discourse ;
Back fly the scenes, and enter foot and horse ;
Pageants on pageants, in long order drawn,
Peers, heralds, bishops, ermine, gold, and lawn ;
The champion too ! and, to complete the jest,
Old Edward's armour beams on Cibber's breast.
With laughter sure Democritus had died,
Had he beheld an audience gape so wide.
Let bear or elephant be e'er so white,
The people, sure, the people are the sight !
Ah, luckless poet ! stretch thy lungs and roar,
That bear or elephant shall heed thee more ;
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends !
Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep
Howl to the roarings of the northern deep ;
Such is the shout, the long-applauding note,
At Quin's high plume, or Oldfield's petticoat ;

Or when from court a birth-day suit bestow'd
Sinks the lost actor in the tawdry load.

Booth enters—hark! the universal peal!

'But has he spoken?'—Not a syllable.

'What shook the stage, and made the people stare?'

Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair.

Yet, lest you think I rally more than teach,
Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach,
Let me for once presume to' instruct the times,
To know the poet from the man of rhymes :
'Tis he who gives my breast a thousand pains,
Can make me feel each passion that he feigns ;
Enrage, compose, with more than magic art ;
With pity and with terror tear my heart ;
And snatch me o'er the earth, or through the air,
To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

But not this part of the poetic state
Alone deserves the favour of the great.
Think of those authors, sir, who would rely
More on a reader's sense than gazer's eye.
Or who shall wander where the Muses sing?
Who climb their mountain, or who taste their spring?
How shall we fill a library with wit,
When Merlin's cave is half unfurnish'd yet?

My liege! why writers little claim your thought
I guess, and, with their leave, will tell the fault.

We poets are (upon a poet's word)
Of all mankind the creatures most absurd :
The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know ;
And if we will recite nine hours in ten,
You lose your patience just like other men.
Then, too, we hurt ourselves when, to defend
A single verse, we quarrel with a friend ;

Repeat, unask'd ; lament, the wit's too fine
For vulgar eyes, and point out every line :
But most when, straining with two weak a wing,
We needs will write epistles to the king ;
And from the moment we oblige the town,
Expect a place or pension from the crown ;
Or dubb'd historians, by express command,
To' enroll your triumphs o'er the seas and land,
Be call'd to court to plan some work divine,
As once for Louis, Boileau and Racine.

Yet think, great sir ! (so many virtues shown)
Ah ! think what poet best may make them known :
Or choose at least some minister of grace,
Fit to bestow the laureat's weighty place,

Charles, to late times to be transmitted fair,
Assign'd his figure to Bernini's care ;
And great Nassau to Kneller's hand decreed
To fix him graceful on the bounding steed ;
So well in paint and stone they judged of merit :
But kings in wit may want discerning spirit.
The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd
Quarles,

Which made old Ben and surly Dennis swear
' No Lord's anointed, but a Russian bear.'

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of king, or conquering chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have shined
(In polish'd verse) the manners and the mind.
O ! could I mount on the Mæonian wing,
Your arms, your actions, your repose, to sing !
What seas you traversed, and what fields you fought !

Your country's peace how oft, how dearly bought !

How barbarous rage subsided at your word,
And nations wonder'd while they dropp'd the sword!

How, when you nodded, o'er the land and deep
Peace stole her wing, and wrapp'd the world in Till earth's extremes your mediation own, [sleep,
And Asia's tyrants tremble at your throne—

But verse, alas ! your majesty disdains :

And I'm not used to panegyric strains.

The zeal of fools offends at any time,

But most of all the zeal of fools in rhyme:

Besides, a fate attends on all I write,

That when I aim at praise, they say I bite.

A vile encomium doubly ridicules ;

There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.

If true, a woeful likeness ; and, if lies,

' Praise undeserved is scandal in disguise.'

Well may he blush who gives it, or receives ;

And when I flatter, let my dirty leaves

(Like journals, odes, and such forgotten things

As Eusden, Philips, Settle, writ of kings,)

Clothe spice, line trunks, or, fluttering in a row,

Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho.

BOOK II. EPISTLE II.

Ludentis speciem dabit, at torquebitur.

HOR.

DEAR colonel, Cobham's and your country's friend !
You love a verse ; take such as I can send.

A Frenchman comes, presents you with his boy,
Bows and begins—' This lad, sir, is of Blois :

Observe his shape how clean ! his locks how curl'd !
My only son, I'd have him see the world :
His French is pure ; his voice too—you shall hear.
Sir, he's your slave for twenty pound a year.
Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer ; what you please :
A perfect genius at an opera song—
To say too much, might do my honour wrong.
Take him with all his virtues, on my word ;
His whole ambition was to serve a lord.
But, sir, to you with what would I not part ?
Though, faith, I fear 'twill break his mother's heart.
Once (and but once) I caught him in a lie,
And then, unwhipp'd, he had the grace to cry :
The fault he has I fairly shall reveal,
(Could you o'erlook but that) it is, to steal.'

If, after this, you took the graceless lad,
Could you complain, my friend, he proved so bad ?
Faith, in such case, if you should prosecute,
I think Sir Godfrey should decide the suit ;
Who sent the thief that stole the cash away,
And punish'd him that put it in his way.

Consider then, and judge me in this light ;
I told you when I went I could not write ;
You said the same ; and are you discontent
With laws to which you gave your own assent ?
Nay, worse, to ask for verse at such a time !
D'ye think me good for nothing but to rhyme ?

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold :
Tired in a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, (poor dog !) and lost it, to a doit.
This put the man in such a desperate mind,
Between revenge, and grief, and hunger join'd,
Against the foe, himself, and all mankind,

He leap'd the trenches, scaled a castle wall,
Tore down a standard, took the fort and all.
'Prodigious well!' his great commander cried,
Gave him much praise, and some reward beside.
Next pleased his excellence a town to batter;
(Its name I know not, and 'tis no great matter)
'Go on, my friend, (he cried) see yonder walls!
Advance and conquer! go where glory calls!
More honours, more rewards, attend the brave.'
Don't you remember what reply he gave?—
'D'ye think me, noble general! such a sot?
Let him take castles who has ne'er a groat.'

Bred up at home, full early I begun
To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus' son:
Besides, my father taught me from a lad
The better art, to know the good from bad;
(And little sure imported to remove,
To hunt for truth in Maudlin's learned grove)
But knottier points, we knew not half so well,
Deprived us soon of our paternal cell;
And certain laws, by sufferers thought unjust,
Denied all posts of profit or of trust;
Hopes after hopes of pious papists fail'd,
While mighty William's thundering arm prevail'd.
For right hereditary tax'd and fined,
He stuck to poverty with peace of mind;
And me, the Muses help'd to undergo it;
Convict a papist he, and I a poet.
But (thanks to Homer) since I live and thrive,
Indebted to no prince or peer alive,
Sure I should want the care of ten Monroes
If I would scribble rather than repose.

Years following years steal something every day,
At last they steal us from ourselves away;

In one our frolics, one amusements end,
 In one a mistress drops, in one a friend.
 This subtle thief of life, this paltry time,
 What will it leave me if it snatch my rhyme?
 If every wheel of that unwearied mill,
 That turn'd ten thousand verses, now stands still?

But, after all, what would you have me do,
 When out of twenty I can please not two?
 When this heroics only deigns to praise,
 Sharp satire that, and that Pindaric lays?
 One likes the pheasant's wing, and one the leg;
 The vulgar boil, the learned roast an egg:
 Hard task to hit the palate of such guests,
 When Oldfield loves what Dartineuf detests!

But grant I may relapse, for want of grace,
 Again to rhyme, can London be the place?
 Who there his Muse, or self, or soul attends,
 In crowds, and courts, law, business, feasts, and
 My counsel sends to execute a deed: [friends?
 A poet begs me I will hear him read.
 In Palace-yard at nine you'll find me there—
 At ten, for certain, sir, in Bloomsbury-square—
 Before the lords at twelve my cause comes on—
 There's a rehearsal, sir, exact at one.—
 'Oh! but a wit can study in the streets,
 And raise his mind above the mob he meets.'
 Not quite so well, however, as one ought:
 A hackney-coach may chance to spoil a thought;
 And then a nodding beam, or pig of lead,
 God knows, may hurt the very ablest head.
 Have you not seen, at Guildhall's narrow pass,
 Two aldermen dispute it with an ass?
 And peers give way, exalted as they are,
 E'en to their own sir-reverence in a car?

Go, lofty poet ! and in such a crowd
Sing thy sonorous verse—but not aloud.
Alas ! to grottos and to groves we run,
To ease and silence, every Muse's son :
Blackmore himself, for any grand effort,
Would drink and dose at Tooting or Earl's-court.
How shall I rhyme in this eternal roar ? [fore ?
How match the bards whom none e'er match'd be-

The man who, stretch'd in Isis' calm retreat,
To books and study gives seven years complete,
See ! strow'd with learned dust, his nightcap on,
He walks an object new beneath the sun !
The boys flock round him, and the people stare :
So stiff, so mute ! some statue you would swear,
Stepp'd from its pedestal to take the air !
And here, while town, and court, and city, roars,
With mobs, and duns, and soldiers, at their doors,
Shall I, in London, act this idle part,
Composing songs for fools to get by heart ?

The Temple late two brother sergeants saw,
Who deem'd each other oracles of law ;
With equal talents these congenial souls,
One lull'd the' Exchequer, and one stunn'd the
Each had a gravity would make you split, [Rolls ;
And shook his head at Murray as a wit.

'Twas, ' Sir, your law'—and ' Sir, your eloquence.'
' Yours Cowper's manner'—and ' Yours Talbot's

Thus we dispose of all poetic merit, [sense.'
Yours Milton's genius, and mine Homer's spirit.
Call Tibbald Shakspeare, and he'll swear the Nine,
Dear Cibber ! never match'd one ode of thine.
Lord ! how we strut through Merlin's cave, to see
No poets there but Stephen', you, and me.

Walk with respect behind, while we at ease
Weave laurel crowns, and take what names we
'My dear Tibullus! (if that will not do) [please.
Let me be Horace, and be Ovid you:
Or, I'm content, allow me Dryden's strains,
And you shall rise up Otway for your pains.'
Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace
This jealous, waspish, wrong-head, rhyming race;
And much must flatter, if the whim should bite,
To court applause, by printing what I write:
But let the fit pass o'er; I'm wise enough
To stop my ears to their confounded stuff.

In vain bad rhymers all mankind reject,
They treat themselves with most profound respect;
'Tis to small purpose that you hold your tongue,
Each, praised within, is happy all day long:
But how severely with themselves proceed
The men who write such verse as we can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care,
Howe'er unwillingly it quits its place,
Nay, though at court (perhaps) it may find grace:
Such they'll degrade; and, sometimes in its stead,
In downright charity revive the dead;
Mark where a bold expressive phrase appears
Bright through the rubbish of some hundred years;
Command old words, that long have slept, to wake,
Words that wise Bacon or brave Raleigh spake;
Or bid the new be English ages hence;
(For Use will father what's begot by Sense)
Pour the full tide of eloquence along,
Serenely pure, and yet divinely strong,
Rich with the treasures of each foreign tongue;
Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
But show no mercy to an empty line;

Then polish all with so much life and ease
 You think 'tis Nature, and a knack to please :
 ' But ease in writing flows from art, not chance,
 As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.'

If such the plague and pains to write by rule,
 Better (say I) be pleased, and play the fool :
 Call, if you will, bad rhyming a disease,
 It gives men happiness, or leaves them ease.
 There lived in primo Georgii (they record)
 A worthy member, no small fool, a lord ;
 Who, though the house was up, delighted sat,
 Heard, noted, answer'd, as in full debate :
 In all but this a man of sober life,
 Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife ;
 Not quite a madman, though a pasty fell,
 And much too wise to walk into a well.
 Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immured,
 They bled, they cupp'd, they purged ; in short, they Whereat the gentleman began to stare— [cured :
 ' My friends ! (he cried) pox take you for your care !
 That from a patriot of distinguish'd note
 Have bled and purged me to a simple vote.'

Well, on the whole, plain prose must be my fate :
 Wisdom (curse on it !) will come soon or late.
 There is a time when poets will grow dull :
 I'll e'en leave verses to the boys at school :
 To rules of poetry no more confined,
 I'll learn to smooth and harmonize my mind,
 Teach every thought within its bounds to roll,
 And keep the equal measure of the soul.

Soon as I enter at my country door,
 My mind resumes the thread it dropp'd before ;
 Thoughts, which at Hyde-park-corner I forgot,
 Meet and rejoin me in the pensive grot :

There all alone, and compliments apart,
I ask these sober questions of my heart :

If, when the more you drink the more you crave,
You tell the doctor; when the more you have
The more you want, why not, with equal ease,
Confess as well your folly as disease ?

The heart resolves this matter in a trice,
' Men only feel the smart, but not the vice.'

When golden angels cease to cure the evil,
You give all royal witchcraft to the Devil :
When servile chaplains cry, that birth and place
Endue a peer with honour, truth, and grace,
Look in that breast, most dirty dean ! be fair,
Say, can you find out one such lodger there ?
Yet still, not heeding what your heart can teach,
You go to church to hear these flatterers preach.

Indeed, could wealth bestow, or wit or merit,
A grain of courage, or a spark of spirit,
The wisest man might blush, I must agree,
If D loved sixpence more than he.

If there be truth in law, and use can give
A property, that's yours on which you live.
Delightful Abs-court, if its fields afford
Their fruits to you, confesses you its lord :
All Worldly's hens, nay, partridge, sold to town,
His venison too a guinea makes your own :
He bought at thousands what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit :
Now, or long since, what difference will be found ?
You pay a penny, and he paid a pound.

Heathcote himself, and such large acred men,
Lords of fat E'sham, or of Lincoln Fen,
Buy every stick of wood that lends them heat,
Buy every pullet they afford to eat.

Yet these are wights who fondly call their own
 Half that the Devil o'erlooks from Lincoln town.
 The laws of God, as well as of the land,
 Abhor a perpetuity should stand:
 Estates have wings, and hang in Fortune's power,
 Loose on the point of every wavering hour,
 Ready by force, or of your own accord,
 By sale, at least by death, to change their lord.
 Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou
 Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. [have?
 All vast possessions (just the same the case
 Whether you call them villa, park, or chase),
 Alas, my Bathurst! what will they avail?
 Join Cotswood hills to Saperton's fair dale;
 Let rising granaries and temples here,
 There mingled farms and pyramids, appear,
 Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
 Enclose whole downs in walls; 'tis all a joke!
 Inexorable Death shall level all,
 And trees, and stones, and farms, and farmer, fall.
 Gold, silver, ivory, vases sculptured high,
 Paint, marble, gems, and robes of Persian dye,
 There are who have not—and, thank Heaven!
 there are
 Who, if they have not, think not worth their care.
 Talk what you will of taste, my friend! you'll find
 Two of a face as soon as of a mind.
 Why of two brothers, rich and restless one
 Ploughs, burns, manures, and toils from sun to sun;
 The other slights, for women, sports, and wines,
 All Townshend's turnips, and all Grosvenor's mines:
 Why one, like Bu, with pay and scorn content,
 Bows and votes on in court and parliament;

One, driven by strong benevolence of soul,
Shall fly, like Oglethorpe, from pole to pole ;
Is known alone to that directing Power
Who forms the genius in the natal hour :
That God of Nature, who, within us still ;
Inclines our action, not constrains our will ;
Various of temper, as of face or frame,
Each individual : His great end the same.

Yes, sir, how small soever be my heap,
A part I will enjoy as well as keep.
My heir may sigh, and think it want of grace
A man so poor would live without a place ;
But sure no statute in his favour says
How free or frugal I shall pass my days ;
I who at some times spend, at others spare,
Divided between carelessness and care.
'Tis one thing, madly to disperse my store ;
Another, not to heed to treasure more ;
Glad, like a boy, to snatch the first good day,
And pleased, if sordid want be far away.

What is't to me (a passenger, God wot)
Whether my vessel be first-rate or not ?
The ship itself may make a better figure,
But I that sail, am neither less nor bigger.
I neither strut with every favouring breath,
Nor strive with all the tempest in my teeth :
In power, wit, figure, virtue, fortune, placed
Behind the foremost, and before the last.

' But why all this of avarice ? I have none.'
I wish you joy, sir, of a tyrant gone :
But does no other lord it at this hour,
As wild and mad ? the avarice of power ?
Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appal ?
Not the black fear of death, that saddens all ?

With terrors round, can Reason hold her throne,
 Despise the known, nor tremble at the' unknown?
 Survey both worlds, intrepid and entire,
 In spite of witches, devils, dreams, and fire?
 Pleased to look forward, pleased to look behind,
 And count each birth-day with a grateful mind?
 Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?
 Canst thou endure a foe, forgive a friend?
 Has age but melted the rough parts away,
 As winter fruits grow mild ere they decay?
 Or will you think, my friend! your business done,
 When of a hundred thorns you pull out one?

Learn to live well, or fairly make your will;
 You've play'd, and loved, and ate, and drank your Walk sober off, before a sprightlier age [fill.
 Comes tittering on, and shoves you from the stage:
 Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
 Whom folly pleases, and whose follies please.

BOOK IV. ODE I,

TO VENUS.

AGAIN? new tumults in my breast?
 Ah, spare me, Venus! let me, let me rest!
 I am not now, alas! the man
 As in the gentle reign of my Queen Anne.
 Ah! sound no more thy soft alarms,
 Nor circle sober fifty with thy charms.
 Mother too fierce of dear desires!
 Turn, turn to willing hearts your wanton fires:
 To number five direct your doves,
 Therespread round Murray all your blooming loves;

Noble and young, who strikes the heart
With every sprightly, every decent part ;
Equal the injured to defend,
To charm the mistress, or to fix the friend :
He, with a hundred arts refined,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind :
To him each rival shall submit,
Make but his riches equal to his wit.
Then shall thy form the marble grace,
(Thy Grecian form) and Chloe lend the face :
His house, embosom'd in the grove,
Sacred to social life and social love,
Shall glitter o'er the pendent green,
Where Thames reflects the visionary scene ;
Thither the silver-sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling Loves and young Desires ;
There every Grace and Muse shall throng,
Exalt the dance, or animate the song ;
There youths and nymphs, in consort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day,
With me, alas ! those joys are o'er ;
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more.
Adieu ! fond hope of mutual fire,
The still-believing, still-renew'd desire :
Adieu ! the heart-expanding bowl,
And all the kind deceivers of the soul !
But why ? ah ! tell me, ah ! too dear,
Steals down my cheek the' involuntary tear ?
Why words so flowing, thoughts so free,
Stop, or turn nonsense, at one glance of thee ?
Thee, dress'd in Fancy's airy beam,
Absent I follow through the' extended dream ;
Now, now I seize, I clasp thy charms,
And now you burst (ah, cruel !) from my arms,

And swiftly shoot along the mall,
Or softly glide by the canal;
Now shown by Cynthia's silver ray,
And now on rolling waters snatch'd away.

BOOK IV. ODE IX.

A FRAGMENT.

LEST you should think that verse shall die
Which sounds the silver Thames along,
Taught on the wings of truth to fly
Above the reach of vulgar song :

Though daring Milton sits sublime,
In Spenser native Muses play ;
Nor yet shall Waller yield to time,
Nor pensive Cowley's moral lay—

Sages and chiefs long since had birth
Ere Cæsar was, or Newton named ;
These raised new empires o'er the earth,
And those new heavens and systems framed.

Vain was the chief's the sage's pride !
They had no poet, and they died.
In vain they schemed, in vain they bled !
They had no poet, and are dead.

THE
SATIRES OF DR. JOHN DONNE,
DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S,
VERSIFIED.

Quid vetat et nosmet Lucili scripta legentes
Quærere, num illius, num rerum dura negarit
Versiculos natura magis factos, et euntes Mollius?

HOR.

SATIRE II.

YES, thank my stars! as early as I knew
This town, I had the sense to hate it too;
Yet here, as e'en in Hell, there must be still
One giant-vice, so excellently ill,
That all beside one pities, not abhors:
As who knows Sappho, smiles at other whores.

I grant that poetry's a crying sin;
It brought (no doubt) the' excise and army in:
Catch'd like the plague, or love, the Lord knows
But that the cure is starving, all allow; [how,
Yet like the papist's is the poet's state,
Poor and disarm'd, and hardly worth your hate!

Here a lean bard, whose wit could never give Himself a dinner, makes an actor live:
The thief condemn'd, in law already dead,
So prompts and saves a rogue who cannot read.
Thus as the pipes of some carved organ move,
The gilded puppets dance and mount above:

Heaved by the breath the' inspiring bellows blow ;
The' inspiring bellows lie and pant below.

One sings the fair; but songs no longer move ;
No rat is rhymed to death, nor maid to love :
In Love's, in Nature's spite, the siege they hold,
And scorn the flesh, the Devil, and all but gold.

These write to lords, some mean reward to get,
As needy beggars sing at doors for meat :
Those write because all write, and so have still
Excuse for writing, and for writing ill.

Wretched, indeed ! but far more wretched yet
Is he who makes his meal on others' wit :
'Tis changed, no doubt, from what it was before ;
His rank digestion makes it wit no more :
Sense pass'd through him no longer is the same ;
For food digested takes another name.

I pass o'er all those confessors and martyrs,
Who live like S—tt—n, or who die like Chartres,
Out-cant old Esdras, or out-drink his heir,
Out-usure Jews, or Irishmen out-swear ;
Wicked as pages, who in early years
Act sins which Prisca's confessor scarce hears.
E'en those I pardon, for whose sinful sake
Schoolmen new tenements in Hell must make ;
Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell.

One, one man only breeds my just offence,
Whom crimes gave wealth, and wealth gave impu-
Time, that at last matures a clap to pox ; [dence :
Whose gentle progress makes a calf an ox,
And brings all natural events to pass,
Hath made him an attorney of an ass.
No young divine, new-beneficed, can be
More pert, more proud, more positive, than he.

What further could I wish the fop to do,
 But turn a wit, and scribble verses too?
 Pierce the soft labyrinth of a lady's ear
 With rhymes of this per cent. and that per year?
 Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
 Like nets, or lime-twigs, for rich widows' hearts;
 Call himself barrister to every wench,
 And woo in language of the Pleas and Bench?
 Language which Boreas might to Auster hold,
 More rough than forty Germans when they scold.

Cursed be the wretch, so venal and so vain,
 Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury-lane.
 'Tis such a bounty as was never known,
 If Peter deigns to help you to your own;
 What thanks, what praise, if Peter but supplies!
 And what a solemn face, if he denies!
 Grave, as when prisoners shake the head, and swear

'Twas only suretyship that brought them there.
 His office keeps your parchment fates entire,
 He starves with cold to save them from the fire;
 For you he walks the streets through rain or dust,
 For not in chariots Peter puts his trust:
 For you he sweats and labours at the laws,
 Takes God to witness he affects your cause,
 And lies to every lord in every thing,
 Like a king's favourite—or like a king.
 These are the talents that adorn them all,
 From wicked Waters even to godly*.
 Not more of simony beneath black gowns,
 Nor more of bastardy in heirs to crowns.
 In shillings and in pence at first they deal,
 And steal so little, few perceive they steal;

Till, like the sea, they compass all the land,
 From Scots to Wight, from Mount to Doverstrand :
 And when rank widows purchase luscious nights,
 Or when a duke to Jansen punts at White's,
 Or city-heir in mortgage melts away,
 Satan himself feels far less joy than they.
 Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that,
 Glean on, and gather up the whole estate ;
 Then strongly fencing ill-got wealth by law,
 Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
 Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
 Than civil codes, with all their glosses, are ;
 So vast, our new divines, we must confess,
 Are fathers of the church for writing less.
 But let them write for you, each rogue impairs
 The deeds, and dexterously omits ses heires :
 No commentator can more slily pass
 O'er a learn'd unintelligible place ;
 Or in quotation shrewd divines leave out
 Those words that would against them clear the doubt.

So Luther thought the Paternoster long,
 When doom'd to say his beads and even-song ;
 But having cast his cowl, and left those laws,
 Adds to Christ's prayer, the power and glory clause.

The lands are bought ; but where are to be found
 Those ancient woods that shaded all the ground ?
 We see no new-built palaces aspire,
 No kitchens emulate the vestal fire.
 Where are those troops of poor, that throng'd of
 The good old landlord's hospitable door ? [yore
 Well I could wish that still, in lordly domes,
 Some beasts were kill'd, though not whole heca-
 tombs ;

That both extremes were banish'd from their walls,
Carthusian fasts and fulsome bacchanals ;
And all mankind might that just mean observe,
In which none e'er could surfeit, none could starve :
These as good works, 'tis true, we all allow,
But, oh! these works are not in fashion now :
Like rich old wardrobes, things extremely rare,
Extremely fine, but what no man will wear.

Thus much I've said, I trust without offence ;
Let no court sycophant pervert my sense,
Nor sly informer watch, these words to draw
Within the reach of treason or the law.

SATIRE IV.

WELL; if it be my time to quit the stage,
Adieu to all the follies of the age !
I die in charity with fool and knave,
Secure of peace at least beyond the grave.
I've had my purgatory here betimes,
And paid for all my satires, all my rhymes.
The poet's hell, its tortures, fiends, and flames,
To this were trifles, toys, and empty names.

With foolish pride my heart was never fired,
Nor the vain itch to' admire or be admired ;
I hoped for no commission from his grace :
I bought no benefice, I begg'd no place ;
Had no new verses nor new suit to show,
Yet went to court!—the Devil would have it so.
But as the fool that in reforming days
Would go to mass in jest, (as story says)
Could not but think to pay his fine was odd,
Since 'twas no form'd design of serving God ;

So was I punish'd, as if full as proud
 As prope to ill, and negligent of good,
 As deep in debt, without a thought to pay,
 As vain, as idle, and as false as they
 Who live at court, for going once that way !
 Scarce was I enter'd, when, behold ! there came
 A thing which Adam had been 'posed to name ;
 Noah had refused it lodging in his ark,
 Where all the race of reptiles might embark :
 A verier monster than on Afric's shore
 The sun e'er got, or slimy Nilus bore,
 Or Sloane or Woodward's wondrous shelves con-
 Nay, all that lying travellers can feign. [tain,
 The watch would hardly let him pass at noon,
 At night would swear him dropp'd out of the moon :
 One whom the mob, when next we find or make
 A popish plot, shall for a Jesuit take,
 And the wise justice, starting from his chair,
 Cry, 'by your priesthood, tell me what you are ?'

Such was the wight: the' apparel on his back
 Though coarse, was reverend, and though bare,
 was black ;

The suit, if by the fashion one might guess,
 Was velvet in the youth of good queen Bess,
 But mere tuff-taffety what now remain'd ;
 So Time, that changes all things, had ordain'd !
 Our sons shall see it leisurely decay,
 First turn plain rash, then vanish quite away.

This thing has travell'd, speaks each language
 And knows what's fit for every state to do ; [too,
 Of whose best phrase and courtly accent join'd
 He forms one tongue, exotic and refined.
 Talkers I've learn'd to bear : Motteux I knew,
 Henley himself I've heard, and Budgell too ;

The doctor's wormwood style, the hash of tongues
 A pedant makes, the storm of Gonson's lungs,
 The whole artillery of the terms of war,
 And (all those plagues in one) the bawling bar :
 These I could bear ; but not a rogue so civil
 Whose tongue will compliment you to the Devil :
 A tongue that can cheat widows, cancel scores,
 Make Scots speak treason, cozen subtlest whores,
 With royal favourites in flattery vie,
 And Oldmixon and Burnet both outlie.

He spies me out; I whisper, gracious God !
 What sin of mine could merit such a rod ?
 That all the shot of dulness now must be
 From this thy blunderbuss discharged on me !
 ' Permit (he cries) no stranger to your fame,
 To crave your sentiment, if *'s your name.
 What speech esteem you most ? ' ' The king's,' said I.
 ' But the best words ? '—' O, sir, the dictionary.'
 ' You miss my aim ; I mean the most acute,
 And perfect speaker ? '—' Onslow, past dispute.'
 ' But, sir, of writers ? '—' Swift for closer style,
 But Hoadly for a period of a mile.'
 ' Why, yes, 'tis granted, these indeed may pass ;
 Good common linguists, and so Panurge was ;
 Nay, troth, the' Apostles (though perhaps too rough)

Had once a pretty gift of tongues enough :
 Yet these were all poor gentlemen ! I dare
 Affirm, 'twas travel made them what they were.'

Thus others' talents having nicely shown,
 He came by sure transition to his own ;
 Till I cried out, ' You prove yourself so able,
 Pity you was not druggerman at Babel ;
 For had they found a linguist half so good,
 I make no question but the tower had stood.'

‘Obliging sir! for courts you sure were made,
 Why then for ever buried in the shade?
 Spirits like you should see and should be seen;
 The king would smile on you—at least the queen.’
 ‘Ah, gentle sir! you courtiers so cajole us—
 But Tully has it, Nunquam minus solus:
 And as for courts, forgive me if I say,
 No lessons now are taught the Spartan way:
 Though in his pictures lust be full display’d,
 Few are the converts Aretine has made;
 And though the court show vice exceeding clear,
 None should, by my advice, learn virtue there.’

At this entranced, he lifts his hands and eyes,
 Squeaks like a high-stretch’d lutestring, and re-
 ‘Oh, ’tis the sweetest of all earthly things [plies;
 To gaze on princes, and to talk of kings!’
 ‘Then, happy man who shows the tombs! (said I)
 He dwells amidst the royal family:
 He every day from king to king can walk,
 Of all our Harries, all our Edwards, talk,
 And get, by speaking truth of monarchs dead,
 What few can of the living, ease and bread.’—
 ‘Lord, sir, a mere mechanic! strangely low,
 And coarse of phrase—your English all are so.
 How elegant your Frenchmen!’—‘Mine d’ye
 mean!

I have but one; I hope the fellow’s clean.’
 ‘O, sir, politely so! nay, let me die,
 Your only wearing is your paduasoy.’
 ‘Not, sir, my only; I have better still,
 And this you see is but my dishabille.’—
 Wild to get loose, his patience I provoke,
 Mistake, confound, object at all he spoke:
 But as coarse iron, sharpen’d, mangles more,
 And itch most hurts when anger’d to a sore;

So when you plague a fool, 'tis still the curse,
You only make the matter worse and worse.

He pass'd it o'er; affects an easy smile
At all my peevishness, and turns his style.
He asks, 'What news?' I tell him of new plays,
New eunuchs, harlequins, and operas.
He hears, and as a still, with simples in it,
Between each drop it gives, stays half a minute,
Loath to enrich me with too quick replies,
By little, and by little drops his lies. [shows,
Mere household trash! of birth-nights, balls, and
More than ten Holinsheds, or Halls, or Stows.
When the queen frown'd or smiled he knows, and
A subtle minister may make of that: [what
Who sins with whom: who got his pension rug,
Or quicken'd a reversion by a drug:
Whose place is quarter'd out three parts in four,
And whether to a bishop, or a whore:
Who, having lost his credit, pawn'd his rent,
Is therefore fit to have a government:
Who, in the secret, deals in stocks secure,
And cheats the' unknowing widow and the poor:
Who makes a trust of charity a job,
And gets an act of parliament to rob;
Why turnpikes rise, and now no cit nor clown
Can gratis see the country or the town:
Shortly no lad shall chuck, or lady vole,
But some excising courtier will have toll:
He tells what strumpet places sells for life,
What squire his lands, what citizen his wife:
At last (which proves him wiser still than all)
What lady's face is not a whited wall.

As one of Woodward's patients, sick, and sore,
I puke, I nauseate—yet he thrusts in more;

Trims Europe's balance, tops the statesman's part,
And talks gazettes and postboys o'er by heart.
Like a big wife at sight of loathsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.
Then as a licensed spy, whom nothing can
Silence or hurt, he libels the great man :
Swears every place entail'd for years to come
In sure succession to the day of doom :
He names the price for every office paid,
And says our wars thrive ill, because delay'd :
Nay hints 'tis by connivance of the court
That Spain robs on, and Dunkirk's still a port.
Not more amazement seized on Circe's guests
To see themselves fall endlong into beasts,
Than mine, to find a subject staid and wise
Already half-turn'd traitor by surprise.
I felt the' infection slide from him to me,
As in the pox some give it to get free ;
And quick to swallow me, methought I saw
One of our giant statues ope its jaw.

In that nice moment, as another lie
Stood just a-tilt, the minister came by :
To him he flies, and bows, and bows again,
Then, close as Umbra, joins the dirty train.
Not Fannius' self more impudently near,
When half his nose is in his prince's ear.
I quaked at heart ; and, still afraid to see
All the court fill'd with stranger things than he,
Ran out as fast as one that pays his bail,
And dreads more actions, hurries from a gaol.

Bear, me, some god ! Oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome Solitude, the nurse of Sense,
Where Contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down, to pity kings !

There sober thought pursued the' amusing theme,
Till fancy colour'd it, and form'd a dream.
A vision hermits can to Hell transport,
And forced e'en me to see the damn'd at court.
Not Dante, dreaming all the' infernal state,
Beheld such scenes of envy, sin, and hate.
Base fear becomes the guilty, not the free,
Suits tyrants, plunderers, but suits not me ;
Shall I, the terror of this sinful town,
Care if a liveried lord or smile or frown :
Who cannot flatter, and detest who can,
Tremble before a noble serving man ?
O my fair mistress, Truth ! shall I quit thee
For huffing, braggart, puff'd nobility ?
Thou who, since yesterday, hast roll'd o'er all
The busy idle blockheads of the ball,
Hast thou, oh Sun ! beheld an emptier sort
Than such as swell this bladder of a court ?
Now pox on those who show a court in wax !
It ought to bring all courtiers on their backs ;
Such painted puppets ! such a varnish'd race
Of hollow gewgaws, only dress and face !
Such waxen noses, stately staring things—
No wonder some folks bow, and think them kings.
See ! where the British youth, engaged no more
At Fig's, at White's, with felons, or a whore,
Pay their last duty to the court, and come
All fresh and fragrant to the drawing-room ;
In hues as gay, and odours as divine,
As the fair fields they sold to look so fine.
'That's velvet for a king !' the flatterer swears ;
'Tis true, for ten days hence 'twill be King Lear's.
Our court may justly to our stage give rules,
That helps it both to fools' coats and to fools.

And why not players strut in courtiers' clothes ?
For these are actors too as well as those.
Wants reach all states ; they beg but better dress'd,
And all is splendid poverty at best.

Painted for sight, and essenced for the smell,
Like frigates fraught with spice and cochineal,
Sail in the ladies : how each pirate eyes
So weak a vessel and so rich a prize !
Top-gallant he, and she in all her trim ;
He boarding her, she striking sail to him.
' Dear countess ! you have charms all hearts to hit !'
And, ' Sweet Sir Fopling ! you have so much wit !'
Such wits and beauties are not praised for nought,
For both the beauty and the wit are bought.
'Twould burst e'en Heraclitus with the spleen
To see those antics, Fopling and Courtin ;
The presence seems, with things so richly odd,
The mosque of Mahound, or some queer pagod.
See them survey their limbs by Durer's rules,
Of all beau-kind the best proportion'd fools !
Adjust their clothes, and to confession draw
Those venial sins, an atom, or a straw :
But, oh ! what terrors must distract the soul
Convicted of that mortal crime, a hole ;
Or should one pound of powder less bespread
Those monkey-tails that wag behind their head !
Thus finish'd, and corrected to a hair,
They march, to prate their hour before the fair.
So first to preach a white-gloved chaplain goes,
With band of lily, and with cheek of rose,
Sweeter than Sharon, in immaculate trim,
Neatness itself impertinent in him,
Let but the ladies smile and they are bless'd ;
Prodigious ! how the things protest, protest.

Peace, fools! or Gonson will for papists seize you,
If once he catch you at your Jesu! Jesu!

Nature made every fop to plague his brother,
Just as one beauty mortifies another.
But here's the captain that will plague them both;
Whose air cries, arm! whose very look's an oath.
The captain's honest, sirs, and that's enough,
Though his soul's bullet, and his body buff.
He spits fore-right; his haughty chest before,
Like battering rams, beats open every door;
And with a face as red, and as awry,
As Herod's hang-dogs in old tapestry,
Scarecrow to boys, the breeding woman's curse,
Has yet a strange ambition to look worse:
Confounds the civil, keeps the rude in awe,
Jests like a licensed fool, commands like law.

Frighted, I quit the room, but leave it so
As men from gaols to execution go;
For hung with deadly sins I see the wall,
And lined with giants deadlier than them all:
Each man an Askapart, of strength to toss,
For quoits, both Temple Bar and Charing Cross.
Scared at the grisly forms, I sweat, I fly,
And shake all o'er, like a discover'd spy.

Courts are too much for wits so weak as mine:
Charge them with Heaven's artillery, bold divine!
From such alone the great rebukes endure,
Whose satire's sacred, and whose rage secure:
'Tis mine to wash a few light stains, but theirs
To deluge sin, and drown a court in tears.
Howe'er, what's now apocrypha, my wit,
In time to come, may pass for holy writ.

EPILOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

In Two Dialogues.

1738.

DIALOGUE I.

F. NOT twice a twelvemonth you appear in print,
 And when it comes, the court see nothing in't :
 You grow correct, that once with rapture writ,
 And are, besides, too moral for a wit.
 Decay of parts, alas ! we all must feel—
 Why now, this moment, do n't I see you steal ?
 'Tis all from Horace ; Horace long before ye
 Said ' Tories call'd him Whig, and Whigs a Tory ;'
 And taught his Romans, in much better metre,
 ' To laugh at fools who put their trust in Peter.'
 But Horace, sir, was delicate, was nice ;
 Bubo observes, he lash'd no sort of vice :
 Horace would say, Sir Billy served the crown,
 Blunt could do business, Higgins knew the town ;
 In Sappho touch the failings of the sex,
 In reverend bishops note some small neglects,
 And own the Spaniard did a waggish thing,
 Who cropp'd our ears, and sent them to the king.
 His sly, polite, insinuating style
 Could please at court, and make Augustus smile :
 An artful manager, that crept between
 His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen.

But 'faith, your very friends will soon be sore ;
 Patriots there are who wish you'd jest no more—
 And where's the glory ? 'twill be only thought
 The great man never offer'd you a groat.
 Go see Sir Robert—

P. See Sir Robert !—hum—

And never laugh—for all my life to come !
 Seen him I have ; but in his happier hour
 Of social pleasure, ill-exchanged for power ;
 Seen him, uncumber'd with a venal tribe,
 Smile without art, and win without a bribe.
 Would he oblige me ? let me only find
 He does not think me what he thinks mankind.
 Come, come, at all I laugh he laughs, no doubt ;
 The only difference is—I dare laugh out.

F. Why, yes : with Scripture still you may be free ;

A horse-laugh, if you please, at honesty ;
 A joke on Jekyll, or some odd old Whig,
 Who never changed his principle or wig :
 A patriot is a fool in every age,
 Whom all lord-chamberlains allow the stage :
 These nothing hurts ; they keep their fashion still,
 And wear their strange old virtue as they will.

If any ask you, ' Who's the man so near
 His prince, that writes in verse, and has his ear ?'
 Why, answer, Lyttelton ! and I'll engage
 The worthy youth shall ne'er be in a rage ;
 But were his verses vile, his whisper base,
 You'd quickly find him in Lord Fanny's case.
 Sejanus, Wolsey, hurt not honest Fleury,
 But well may put some statesmen in a fury.
 Laugh then at any but at fools or foes ;
 These you but anger, and you mend not those.

Laugh at your friends, and, if your friends are sore,
 So much the better, you may laugh the more.
 To vice and folly to confine the jest,
 Sets half the world, God knows, against the rest,
 Did not the sneer of more impartial men
 At sense and virtue balance all again.
 Judicious wits spread wide the ridicule,
 And charitably comfort knave and fool.

P. Dear sir, forgive the prejudice of youth :
 Adieu distinction, satire, warmth, and truth !
 Come, harmless characters that no one hit ;
 Come, Henley's oratory, Osborne's wit !
 The honey dropping from Favonia's tongue,
 The flowers of Bubo, and the flow of Young !
 The gracious dew of pulpit eloquence,
 And all the well-whipp'd cream of courtly sense ;
 The first was H * * vy's, F * * 's next, and then
 The S * * te's, and then H * * vy's once again.
 O come ! that easy Ciceronian style,
 So Latin, yet so English all the while,
 As, though the pride of Middleton and Bland,
 All boys may read, and girls may understand !
 Then might I sing without the least offence,
 And all I sung should be the nation's sense ;
 Or teach the melancholy Muse to mourn,
 Hang the sad verse on Carolina's urn,
 And hail her passage to the realms of rest,
 All parts perform'd, and all her children bless'd !
 So—Satire is no more—I feel it die—
 No gazetteer more innocent than I—
 And let, a God's name ! every fool and knave
 Be graced through life, and flatter'd in his grave.
F. Why so ? if satire knows its time and place,
 You still may lash the greatest—in disgrace ;

For merit will by turns forsake them all;
Would you know when? exactly when they fall.
But let all satire in all changes spare
Immortal Sk, and grave Dere.
Silent and soft, as saints remove to Heaven,
All ties dissolved, and every sin forgiven,
These may some gentle ministerial wing
Receive, and place for ever near a king!
There, where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;
There, where no father's, brother's, friend's disgrace
Once break their rest, or stir them from their place;
But past the sense of human miseries,
All tears are wiped for ever from all eyes;
No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question, or a job.

P. Good Heaven forbid that I should blast their glory,

Who know how like Whig ministers to Tory,
And when three sovereigns died could scarce be vex'd,

Considering what a gracious prince was next.
Have I, in silent wonder, seen such things
As pride in slaves, and avarice in kings;
And at a peer or peeress shall I fret
Who starves a sister, or forswears a debt?
Virtue, I grant you, is an empty boast;
But shall the dignity of vice be lost?
Ye gods! shall Cibber's son, without rebuke,
Swear like a lord; or Rich outwhere a duke?
A favourite's porter with his master vie,
Be bribed as often, and as often lie?
Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill?
Or Japhet pocket, like his grace, a will?

Is it for Bond or Peter (paltry things)
To pay their debts, or keep their faith, like kings ?
If Blount dispatch'd himself, he play'd the man,
And so mayst thou, illustrious Passeran !
But shall a printer, weary of his life,
Learn from their books to hang himself and wife ?
This, this, my friend, I cannot, must not bear ;
Vice thus abus'd demands a nation's care :
This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of the laws on gin.

Let modest Foster, if he will, excel
Ten metropolitans in preaching well ;
A simple Quaker, or a Quaker's wife,
Outdo Landaff in doctrine—yea, in life :
Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.
Virtue may choose the high or low degree,
'Tis just alike to Virtue and to me ;
Dwell in a monk, or light upon a king,
She's still the same, beloved, contented thing.
Vice is undone, if she forgets her birth,
And stoops from angels to the dregs of earth ;
But 'tis the fall degrades her to a whore ;
Let greatness own her, and she's mean no more :
Her birth, her beauty, crowds and courts confess,
Chaste matrons praise her, and grave bishops bless ;
In golden chains the willing world she draws,
And hers the gospel is, and hers the laws ;
Mounts the tribunal, lifts her scarlet head,
And sees pale Virtue carted in her stead.
Lo ! at the wheels of her triumphal car
Old England's genius, rough with many a scar,
Dragg'd in the dust ! his arms hang idly round,
His flag inverted trails along the ground !

Our youth, all liveried o'er with foreign gold,
Before her dance: behind her crawl the old!
See thronging millions to the pagod run,
And offer country, parent, wife, or son!
Hear her black trumpet through the land proclaim,
That not to be corrupted is the shame.
In soldier, churchman, patriot, man in power,
'Tis avarice all, ambition is no more!
See all our nobles begging to be slaves!
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves!
The wit of cheats, the courage of a whore,
Are what ten thousand envy and adore:
All, all look up, with reverential awe,
At crimes that scape, or triumph o'er the law:
While truth, worth, wisdom, daily they decry—
'Nothing is sacred now but villany.'

Yet may this versè (if such a verse remain)
Show there was one who held it in disdain.

DIALOGUE II.

F. 'Tis all a libel—Paxton¹, sir, will say.

P. Not yet, my friend! to-morrow 'faith it may;
And for that very cause I print to-day.
How should I fret to mangle every line
In reverence to the sins of thirty-nine?
Vice with such giant strides comes on amain,
Invention strives to be before in vain;
Feign what I will, and paint it o'er so strong,
Some rising genius sins up to my song.

F. Yet none but you by name the guilty lash;
E'en Guthry saves half Newgate by a dash.

Spare then the person, and expose the vice.

P. How, sir! not damn the sharper, but the dice?
Come on then, satire! general, unconfined,
Spread thy broad wing, and souse on all the kind.
Ye statesmen, priests, of one religion all!
Ye tradesmen, vile, in army, court, or hall!
Ye reverend atheists! F. Scandal! name them, who?

P. Why that's the thing you bid me not to do.
Who starved a sister, who forswore a debt,
I never named; the town's inquiring yet.
The poisoning dame—F. You mean—P. I do n't.
—F. You do.

P. See, now I keep the secret, and not you!
The bribing statesman—F. Hold, too high you go.

P. The bribed elector—F. There you stoop too low.

P. I fain would please you, if I knew with what.
Tell me; which knave is lawful game, which not?
Must great offenders, once escaped the crown,
Like royal harts, be never more run down?
Admit your law to spare the knight requires,
As beasts of nature may we hunt the squires?
Suppose I censure—you know what I mean—
To save a bishop, may I name a dean?

F. A dean, sir? no: his fortune is not made;
You hurt a man that's rising in the trade.

P. If not the tradesman who set up to-day,
Much less the prentice who to-morrow may.
Down, down, proud satire! though a realm be spoil'd,

Arraign no mightier thief than wretched Wild;
Or, if a court or country's made a job,
Go drench a pickpocket, and join the mob.

But, sir, I beg you (for the love of vice!)
 The matter's weighty, pray consider twice:
 Have you less pity for the needy cheat,
 The poor and friendless villain, than the great?
 Alas! the small discredit of a bribe
 Scarce hurts the lawyer, but undoes the scribe.
 Then better sure it charity becomes
 To tax directors, who (thank God!) have plums;
 Still better ministers, or if the thing
 May pinch e'en there—why lay it on a king.

F. Stop! stop!

P. Must Satire then nor rise nor fall?
 Speak out, and bid me blame no rogues at all.

F. Yes, strike that Wild, I'll justify the blow.

P. Strike? why the man was hang'd ten years
 Who now that obsolete example fears? [ago:
 E'en Peter trembles only for his ears.

F. What, always Peter? Peter thinks you mad;
 You make men desperate, if they once are bad,
 Else might he take to virtue some years hence—

P. As Sk, if he lives, will love the prince.

F. Strange spleen to Sk!

P. Do I wrong the man?
 God knows I praise a courtier where I can.
 When I confess there is who feels for fame,
 And melts to goodness, need I Scarborough name?
 Pleased let me own, in Esher's peaceful grove,
 (Where Kent and Nature vie for Pelham's love)
 The scene, the master, opening to my view,
 I sit and dream I see my Craggs anew.

E'en in a bishop I can spy desert;
 Secker is decent, Rundel has a heart;
 Manners with candour are to Benson given,
 To Berkeley every virtue under Heaven.

But does the court a worthy man remove
 That instant, I declare, he has my love:
 I shun his zenith, court his mild decline;
 Thus Somers once and Halifax were mine.
 Oft in the clear still mirror of retreat
 I studied Shrewsbury, the wise and great:
 Carleton's calm sense and Stanhope's noble flame
 Compared, and knew their generous end the same:
 How pleasing Atterbury's softer hour!
 How shined the soul, unconquer'd, in the Tower!
 How can I Pulteney, Chesterfield, forget,
 While Roman spirit charms, and Attic wit?
 Argyle, the state's whole thunder born to wield,
 And shake alike the senate and the field?
 Or Wyndham,* just to Freedom and the throne,
 The master of our passions and his own?
 Names which I long have loved, nor loved in vain, Rank'd with their friends, not number'd with their train;

And if yet higher the proud list should end,
 Still let me say,—no follower but a friend.

Yet think not friendship only prompts my lays;
 I follow Virtue; where she shines I praise,
 Point she to priest or elder, Whig or Tory,
 Or round a Quaker's beaver cast a glory.
 I never (to my sorrow I declare)
 Dined with the Man of Ross or my Lord Mayor.
 Some in their choice of friends (nay, look not grave)
 Have still a secret bias to a knave:
 To find an honest man I beat about,
 And love him, court him, praise him in or out.

F. Then why so few commended?

P. Not so fierce;

Find you the virtue, and I'll find the verse.

But random praise—the task can ne'er be done ;
Each mother asks it for her booby son,
Each widow asks it for the best of men,
For him she weeps, for him she weds again.
Praise cannot stoop, like satire, to the ground ;
The number may be hang'd, but not be crown'd.
Enough for half the greatest of these days
To scape my censure, not expect my praise.
Are they not rich ? what more can they pretend ?
Dare they to hope a poet for their friend ?
What Richelieu wanted, Louis scarce could gain,
And what young Ammon wish'd, but wish'd in vain.
No power the Muse's friendship can command :
No power, when Virtue claims it, can withstand.
To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line ;
O let my country's friends illumine mine ! [no sin ;
—What are you thinking ? F. Faith the thought's
I think your friends are out, and would be in.

P. If merely to come in, sir, they go out,
The way they take is strangely round about.

F. They too may be corrupted, you'll allow ?

P. I only call those knaves who are so now.
Is that too little ? come then, I'll comply—
Spirit of Arnall ! aid me while I lie :
Cobham's a coward, Polwarth is a slave,
And Lyttelton a dark designing knave,
St. John has ever been a wealthy fool—
But let me add, Sir Robert's mighty dull,
Has never made a friend in private life,
And was, besides, a tyrant to his wife.

But pray, when others praise him, do I blame ?
Call Verres, Wolsey, any odious name ?
Why rail they then if but a wreath of mine,
Oh, all-accomplish'd St. John ! deck thy shrine ?

What! shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the day,
 When Paxton gives him double pots and pay,
 Or each new-pension'd sycophant, pretend
 To break my windows if I treat a friend,
 Then wisely plead to me they meant no hurt,
 But 'twas my guest at whom they thrèw the dirt?
 Sure if I spare the minister, no rules
 Of honour bind me not to maul his tools;
 Sure if they cannot cut, it may be said
 His saws are toothless, and his hatchets lead.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
 To see a footman kick'd that took his pay;
 But when he heard the' affront the fellow gave,
 Knew one a man of honour, one a knave,
 The prudent general turn'd it to a jest,
 And begg'd he'd take the pains to kick the rest;
 Which not at present having time to do—

F. Hold, sir! for God's sake: where's the' affront to you?

Against your worship when had Sk writ?
 Or P*ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?
 Or grant the bard whose distich all commend
 [In power a servant, out of power a friend]
 To Wle guilty of some venial sin,
 What's that to you, who ne'er was out nor in?

The priest whose flattery bedropp'd the crown
 How hurt he you? he only stain'd the gown.
 And how did, pray, the florid youth offend,
 Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend?

P. Faith, it imports not much from whom it came;

Whoever borrow'd could not be to blame,
 Since the whole house did afterwards the same.

Let courtly wits to wits afford supply,
 As hog to hog in huts of Westphaly :
 If one, through Nature's bounty or his lord's
 Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
 From him the next receives it, thick or thin,
 As pure a mess almost as it came in ;
 The blessed benefit, not there confined,
 Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind ;
 From tail to mouth they feed and they carouse ;
 The last full fairly gives it to the House.

F. This filthy simile, this beastly line,
 Quite turns my stomach—P. So does flattery mine ;
 And all your courtly civet-cats can vent,
 Perfume to you, to me is excrement.
 But hear me further—Japhet, 'tis agreed,
 Writ not, and Chartres scarce could write or read ;
 In all the courts of Pindus guiltless quite ;
 But pens can forge, my friend, that cannot write ;
 And must no egg in Japhet's face be thrown,
 Because the deed he forged was not my own ?
 Must never patriot then declaim at gin
 Unless, good man ! he has been fairly in ?
 No zealous pastor blame a failing spouse
 Without a staring reason on his brows ?
 And each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
 Because the insult's not on man, but God ?

Ask you what provocation I have had ?
 The strong antipathy of good to bad.
 When truth or virtue an affront endures,
 The affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours.
 Mine, as a foe profess'd to false pretence,
 Who think a coxcomb's honour like his sense ;
 Mine, as a friend to every worthy mind ;
 And mine as man, who feel for all mankind.

F. You're strangely proud.

P. So proud, I am no slave ;
So impudent, I own myself no knave ;
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave.
Yes, I am proud ; I must be proud to see
Men, not afraid of God, afraid of me ;
Safe from the bar, the pulpit, and the throne,
Yet touch'd and shamed by ridicule alone.

O sacred weapon ! left for Truth's defence,
Sole dread of Folly, Vice, and Insolence !
To all but Heaven-directed hands denied,
The Muse may give thee, but the gods must guide :
Reverent I touch thee ! but with honest zeal,
To rouse the watchmen of the public weal,
To Virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the prelate, slumbering in his stall.
Ye tinsel insects ! whom a court maintains,
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eye of day !
The Muse's wing shall brush you all away :
All his grace preaches, all his lordship sings,
All that makes saints of queens, and gods of kings ;
All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,
Like the last gazette or the last address.

When black Ambition stains a public cause,
A monarch's sword when mad Vainglory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar,
Nor Boileau turn the feather to a star.

Not so when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from Virtue's shrine,
Her priestess Muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity.

There other trophies deck the truly brave
Than such as Anstis casts into the grave ;
Far other stars than * and * * wear,
And may descend to Mordington from Stair :
(Such as on Hough's unsullied mitre shine,
Or beam, good Digby, from a heart like thine)
Let Envy howl, while Heaven's whole chorussings,
And bark at honour not conferr'd by kings ;
Let Flattery, sickening, see the incense rise,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies ;
Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line,
And makes immortal, verse as mean as mine.

Yes, the last pen for Freedom let me draw,
When Truth stands trembling on the edge of law.
Here, last of Britons ! let your names be read :
Are none, none living ? let me praise the dead ;
And for that cause which made your fathers shine,
Fall by the votes of their degenerate line.

F. Alas ! alas ! pray end what you began,
And write next winter more Essays on Man.

THE DUNCIAD.

A LETTER TO THE PUBLISHER;

OCCASIONED BY

THE FIRST CORRECT EDITION

OF

The Dunciad.

IT is with pleasure I hear that you have procured a correct copy of the Dunciad, which the many surreptitious ones have rendered so necessary; and it is yet with more, that I am informed it will be attended with a Commentary; a work so requisite, that I cannot think the author himself would have omitted it, had he approved of the first appearance of this poem.

Such Notes as have occurred to me I herewith send you: you will oblige me by inserting them amongst those which are, or will be, transmitted to you by others; since not only the author's friends, but even strangers, appear engaged by humanity, to take some care of an orphan of so much genius and spirit, which its parent seems to have abandoned from the very beginning, and suffered to step into the world naked, unguarded, and unattended.

It was upon reading some of the abusive papers lately published, that my great regard to a person whose friendship I esteem as one of the chief honours of my life, and a much greater respect to truth than to him or any man living, engaged me in inquiries of which the inclosed Notes are the fruit.

I perceived that most of these authors had been (doubtless very wisely) the first aggressors. They had tried, till they were weary, what was to be got by railing at each other : nobody was either concerned or surprised if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce, but every one was curious to read what could be said to prove Mr. Pope one, and was ready to pay something for such a discovery ; a stratagem which, would they fairly own it, might not only reconcile them to me, but screen them from the resentment of their lawful superiors, whom they daily abuse, only (as I charitably hope) to get that by them, which they cannot get from them.

I found this was not all : ill success in that had transported them to personal abuse, either of himself, or (what I think he could less forgive) of his friends. They had called men of virtue and honour bad men, long before he had either leisure or inclination to call them bad writers ; and some of them had been such old offenders, that he had quite forgotten their persons, as well as their slanders, till they were pleased to revive them.

Now what had Mr. Pope done before to incense them ? He had published those works which are in the hands of every body, in which not the least mention is made of any of them. And what has he done since? He has laughed, and written the Dunciad. What has that said of them? A very serious truth, which the public had said before, that they were dull; and what it had no sooner said, but they themselves were at great pains to procure, or even purchase, room in the prints to testify under their hands to the truth of it.

I should still have been silent, if either I had seen any inclination in my friend to be serious with such accusers, or if they had only meddled with his writings; since whoever publishes, puts himself on his trial by his country: but when his moral character was attacked, and in a manner from which neither truth nor virtue can secure the most innocent; in a manner which, though it annihilates the credit of the accusation with the just and impartial, yet aggravates very much the guilt of the accusers, I mean by authors without names; then I thought, since the danger was common to all, the concern ought to be so; and that it was an act of justice to detect the authors, not only on this account, but as many of them are, the same who, for several years past, have made free with the greatest names in church and state, exposed to the world the private misfortunes of families, abused all, even to women; and whose prostituted papers (for one or other party in the unhappy divisions of their country) have insulted the fallen, the friendless, the exiled, and the dead.

Besides this, which I take to be a public concern, I have already confessed I had a private one. I am one of that number who have long loved and esteemed Mr. Pope; and had often declared it was not his capacity or writings, (which we ever thought the least valuable part of his character) but the honest, open, and beneficent man, that we most esteemed and loved in him. Now, if what these people say were believed, I must appear to all my friends, either a fool or a knave; either imposed on myself, or imposing on them: so that I am as much interested in the confutation of these calumnies as he is himself.

I am no author, and consequently not to be suspected either of jealousy or resentment against any of the men, of whom scarce one is known to me by sight; and as for their writings, I have sought them (on this one occasion) in vain, in the closets and libraries of all my acquaintance. I had still been in the dark, if a gentleman had not procured me (I suppose from some of themselves, for they are generally much more dangerous friends than enemies) the passages I send you. I solemnly protest I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon and so irrecoverably lost. You may, in some measure, prevent it, by preserving at least their titles¹, and discovering (as far as you can depend on the truth of your information) the names of the concealed authors.

The first objection I have heard made to the poem is, that the persons are too obscure for satire. The persons themselves, rather than allow the objection, would forgive the satire; and if one could be tempted to afford it a serious answer, were not all assassins, popular insurrections, the insolence of the rabble without doors, and of domestics within, most wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of offenders indemnified them from punishment? On the contrary, obscurity renders them more dangerous, as less thought of: law can pronounce judgment only on open facts: morality alone can pass censure on intentions of mischief; so that for secret calumny, or 'the arrow flying in the dark,' there is no public punishment left, but what a good writer inflicts.

The next objection is, that these sort of authors are poor. That might be pleaded as an excuse at the Old Bailey for lesser crimes than defamation, (for it is the case of almost all who are tried there) but sure it can be none here: for who will pretend that the robbing another of his reputation supplies the want of it in himself? I question not but such authors are poor, and heartily wish the objection were removed by any honest livelihood; but poverty is here the accident, not the subject. He who describes malice and villany to be pale and meagre, expresses not the least anger against paleness or leanness, but against malice and villany. The apothecary in 'Romeo and Juliet' is poor; but is he therefore justified in vending poison? Not but poverty itself becomes a just subject of satire, when it is the consequence of vice, prodigality, or neglect of one's lawful calling; for then it increases the public burden, fills the streets and highways with robbers, and the garrets with clippers, coiners, and weekly journalists.

But admitting that two or three of these offend less in their morals than in their writings; must poverty make nonsense sacred? If so, the fame of bad authors would be much better consulted than that of all the good ones in the world; and not one of a hundred had ever been called by his right name.

They mistake the whole matter : it is not charity to encourage them in the way they follow, but to get them out of it ; for men are not bunglers because they are poor, but they are poor because they are bunglers.

Is it not pleasant enough to hear our authors crying out, on the one hand, as if their persons and characters were too sacred for satire ; and the public objecting, on the other, that they are too mean even for ridicule ? But whether bread or fame be their end, it must be allowed, our author, by and in this poem, has mercifully given them a little of both.

There are two or three who, by their rank and fortune, have no benefit from the former objections, supposing them good, and these I was sorry to see in such company ; but if, without any provocation, two or three gentlemen will fall upon one, in an affair wherein his interest and reputation are equally embarked, they cannot, certainly, after they have been content to print themselves his enemies, complain of being put into the number of them.

Others, I am told, pretend to have been once his friends. Surely they are their enemies who say so, since nothing can be more odious than to treat a friend as they have done. But of this I cannot persuade myself, when I consider the constant and eternal aversion of all bad writers to a good one.

Such as claim a merit from being his admirers, I would gladly ask, if it lays him under a personal obligation ? At that rate, he would be the most obliged humble servant in the world. I dare swear for these in particular, he never desired them to be his admirers, nor promised in return to be theirs: that had truly been a sign he was of their acquaintance; but would not the malicious world have suspected such an approbation of some motive worse than ignorance, in the author of the Essay on Criticism? Be it as it will, the reasons of their admiration and of his contempt are equally subsisting, for his works and theirs are the very same that they were.

One, therefore, of their assertions I believe may be true, 'that he has a contempt for their writings:' and there is another which would probably be sooner allowed by himself than by any good judge beside, 'that his own have found too much success with the public.' But as it cannot consist with his modesty to claim this as a justice, it lies not on him, but entirely on the public, to defend its own judgment.

There remains what, in my opinion, might seem a better plea for these people than any they have made use of:—If obscurity or poverty were to exempt a man from satire, much more should folly or dulness, which are still more involuntary; nay, as much so as personal deformity. But even this will not help them: deformity becomes an object of ridicule when a man sets up for being handsome; and so must dulness, when he sets up for a wit. They are not ridiculed because ridicule in itself is, or ought to be, a pleasure; but because it is just to undeceive and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition; because particular interest ought to yield to general, and a great number, who are not naturally fools, ought never to be made so, in complaisance to those who are. Accordingly we find, that in all ages, all vain pretenders, were they ever so poor, or ever so dull, have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Having mentioned Boileau, the greatest poet and most judicious critic of his age and country; admirable for his talents, and yet perhaps more admirable for his judgment in the proper application of them; I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author, in qualities, fame, and fortune; in the distinctions shown them by their superiors, in the general esteem of their equals, and in their extended reputation amongst foreigners; in the latter of which ours has met with the better fate, as he has had for his translators persons of the most eminent rank and abilities in their respective nations². But the resemblance holds in nothing more than in their being equally abused by the ignorant pretenders to poetry of their times; of which not the least memory will remain but in their own writings, and in the notes made upon them. What Boileau has done in almost all his poems, our author has only in this. I dare answer for him, he will do it in no more; and on this principle, of attacking few but who had slandered him, he could not have done it at all, had he been confined from censuring obscure and worthless persons; for scarce any other were his enemies. However, as the parity is so remarkable, I hope it will continue to the last; and if ever he should give us an edition of this poem himself, I may see some of them treated as gently, on their repentance or better merit, as Perrault and Quinault were at last by Boileau.

In one point I must be allowed to think the character of our English poet the more amiable: he has not been a follower of fortune or success; he has lived with the great without flattery; been a friend to men in power without pensions, from whom, as he asked, so he received, no favour, but what was done him in his friends. As his satires were the more just for being delayed, so were his panegyrics; bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, only for such virtues as he had long observed in them, and only at such times as others cease to praise, if not begin to calumniate them—I mean when out of power, or out of fashion³. A satire, therefore, on writers so notorious for the contrary practice, became no man so well as himself; as none, it is plain, was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those of whom they had most abused; namely, the greatest and best of all parties. Let me add a further reason, that, though engaged in their friendships, he never espoused their animosities; and can almost singly challenge this honour, not to have written a line of any man which, through guilt, through shame, or through fear, through variety of fortune, or change of interests, he was ever unwilling to own.

I shall conclude with remarking, what a pleasure it must be to every reader of humanity to see all along that our author, in his very laughter, is not indulging his own ill-nature, but only punishing that of others. As to his poem, those alone are capable of doing it justice who, to use the words of a great writer, know how hard it is (with regard both to his subject and his manner) vetustis dare novitatem, obsoletis nitorem, obscuris lucem, fastiditis gratiam. I am

Your most humble servant,

St. James's,
Dec. 22, 1728.

WILLIAM CLELAND⁴.

⁴ This gentleman was of Scotland, and bred at the university of Utrecht with the Earl of Mar. He served in Spain under Earl Rivers. After the peace, he was made one of the commissioners of the customs in Scotland, and then of taxes in England; in which, having shown himself for twenty years diligent, punctual, and incorruptible, (though without any other assistance of fortune) he was suddenly displaced by the minister, in the sixty-eighth year of his age, and died two months after, in 1741. He was a person of universal learning, and of an enlarged conversation; no man had a warmer heart for his friend, or a sincerer attachment to the constitution of his country.

WITH THE HYPERCRITICS OF ARISTARCHUS.

DENNIS, Remarks on Prince Arthur.

I CANNOT but think it the most reasonable thing in the world to distinguish good writers, by discouraging the bad: nor is it an ill-natured thing, in relation even to the very persons upon whom the reflections are made. It is true, it may deprive them a little the sooner of a short profit and a transitory reputation; but then it may have a good effect, and oblige them (before it be too late) to decline that for which they are so very unfit, and to have recourse to something in which they may be more successful.

Character of Mr. P. 1716.

The persons whom Boileau has attacked in his writings, have been for the most part authors, and most of those authors poets: and the censures he hath passed upon them have been confirmed by all Europe.

GILDON, Preface to his New Rehearsal.

It is the common cry of the poetasters of the town, and their fautors, that it is an ill-natured thing to expose the pretenders to wit and poetry.

The judges and magistrates may with full as good reason be reproached with ill-nature for putting the laws in execution against a thief or impostor.—The same will hold in the Republic of Letters, if the critics and judges will let every ignorant pretender to scribbling pass on the world.

THEOBALD, Letter to MIST, June 22, 1728.

Attacks may be levelled either against failures in genius, or against the pretensions of writing without one.

CONCANEN, Ded. to the Author of the Dunciad.

A Satire upon dulness is a thing that has been used and allowed in all ages.

Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, wicked Scribbler.

TESTIMONIES OF AUTHORS

CONCERNING

Our Poet and his Works.

M. SCRIBLERUS LECTORI S.

BEFORE we present you with our exercitations on this most delectable poem (drawn from the many volumes of our adversaria on modern authors) we shall here, according to the laudable usage of editors, collect the various judgments of the learned concerning our poet; various, indeed, not only of different authors, but of the same author at different seasons. Nor shall we gather only the testimonies of such eminent wits as would of course descend to posterity, and consequently be read without our collection; but we shall likewise, with incredible labour, seek out for divers others, which, but for this our diligence, could never, at the distance of a few months, appear to the eye of the most curious. Hereby thou mayst not only receive the delectation of variety, but also arrive at a more certain judgment, by a grave and circumspect comparison of the witnesses with each other, or of each with himself. Hence, also, thou wilt be enabled to draw reflections, not only of a critical, but a moral nature, by being let into many particulars of the person as well as genius, and of the fortune as well as merit, of our author: in which if I relate some things of little concern, peradventure, to thee, and some of as little even to him, I intreat thee to consider how minutely all true critics and commentators are wont to insist upon such, and how material they seem to themselves, if to none other. Forgive me, gentle reader, if (following learned example) I, ever and anon, become tedious; allow me to take the same pains to find whether any author were good or bad, well or ill-natured, modest or arrogant; as another, whether his author was fair or brown, short or tall, or whether he wore a coat or a cassock.

We purposed to begin with his life, parentage, and education; but as to these even his contemporaries do exceedingly differ. One saith¹ he was educated at home; another², that he was bred at

St. Omer's by Jesuits; a third³, not at St. Omer's, but at Oxford; a fourth⁴, that he had no university education at all. Those who allow him to be bred at home differ as much concerning his tutor: one saith⁵ he was kept by his father on purpose; a second⁶, that he was an itinerant priest; a third⁷, that he was a parson; one⁸ call-eth him a secular clergyman of the Church of Rome; another⁹, a monk. As little do they agree about his father, whom¹⁰ one supposeth, like the father of Hesiod, a tradesman or merchant; another¹¹, a husbandman; another¹², a hatter, &c. Nor has an author been wanting to give our poet such a father as Apuleius hath to Plato, Jamblichus to Pythagoras, and divers to Homer, namely, a demon: for thus Mr. Gildon¹³, 'Certain it is that his original is not from Adam, but the devil, and that he wanteth nothing but horns and tail to be the exact resemblance of his infernal father.' Finding, therefore, such contrariety of opinions, and (whatever be ours of this sort of generation) not being fond to enter into controversy, we shall defer writing the Life of our poet till authors can determine among themselves what parents or education he had, or whether he had any education or parents at all.

Proceed we to what is more certain, his Works, though not less uncertain the judgments concerning them; beginning with his Essay on Criticism, of which hear first the most ancient of critics,

MR. JOHN DENNIS.

‘ His precepts are false or trivial, or both; his thoughts are crude and abortive; his expressions absurd, his numbers harsh and unmusical, his rhymes trivial and common.—Instead of majesty, we have something that is very mean; instead of gravity, something that is very boyish; and instead of perspicuity and lucid order, we have but too often obscurity and confusion.’ And in another place: ‘ What rare numbers are here! would not one swear that this youngster had espoused some antiquated Muse, who had sued out a divorce from some superannuated sinner, upon account of impotence, and who being poxed by her former spouse, has got the gout in her decrepit age, which makes her hobble so damnably¹⁴?’

No less peremptory is the censure of our hyper-critical historian,

MR. OLDMIXON.

‘ I dare not say any thing of the Essay on Criticism in verse; but if any more curious reader has discovered in it something new, which is not in Dryden’s Prefaces, Dedications, and his Essay on Dramatic Poetry, not to mention the French critics, I should be very glad to have the benefit of the discovery¹⁵.'

He is followed (as in fame, so in judgment) by the modest and simple-minded

MR. LEONARD WELSTED,

who, out of great respect to our poet, not naming him, doth yet glance at his Essay, together with the Duke of Buckingham's, and the criticisms of Dryden and of Horace, which he more openly taxeth¹⁶: 'As to the numerous treatises, essays, arts, &c. both in verse and prose, that have been written by the moderns on this groundwork, they do but hackney the same thoughts over again, making them still more trite. Most of their pieces are nothing but a pert insipid heap of commonplace. Horace has, even in his Art of Poetry, thrown out several things which plainly show he thought an Art of Poetry was of no use, even while he was writing one.'

To all which great authorities we can only oppose that of

MR. ADDISON.

'The Art of Criticism,' saith he, 'which was published some months since, is a masterpiece in its kind. The observations follow one another like those in Horace's Art of Poetry, without that methodical regularity which would have been requisite in a prose writer. They are some of them uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained with that ease and perspicuity in which they are delivered. As for those which are the most known, and the most received, they are placed in so beautiful a light, and illustrated with such apt allusions, that they have in them all the graces of novelty, and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. And here give me leave to mention what Mons. Boileau has so well enlarged upon in the Preface to his Works; that wit and fine writing doth not consist so much in advancing things that are new, as in giving things that are known an agreeable turn. It is impossible for us, who live in the latter ages of the world, to make observations in criticism, morality, or any art or science, which have not been touched upon by others; we have little else left us but to represent the common sense of mankind in more strong, more beautiful, or more uncommon lights. If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but few precepts in it which he may not meet with in Aristotle, and which were not commonly known by all the poets of the Augustan age. His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we are chiefly to admire.

‘Longinus, in his Reflections, has given us the same kind of sublime, which he observes in the several passages that occasioned them: I cannot but take notice that our English author has, after the same manner, exemplified several of the precepts in the very precepts themselves.’ He then produces some instances of a particular beauty in the numbers, and concludes with saying, that 'There are three poems in our tongue of the same nature, and each a masterpiece in its kind; the Essay on Translated Verse, the Essay on the Art of Poetry, and the Essay on Criticism.'

Of Windsor Forest, positive is the judgment of the affirmative

MR. JOHN DENNIS,

' "That it is a wretched rhapsody, impudently writ in emulation of the Cooper's Hill of Sir John Denham; the author of it is obscure, is ambiguous, is affected, is temerarious, is barbarous,"

But the author of the Dispensary, in the Preface to his poem of Claremont¹⁸, differs from this opinion: 'Those who have seen these two excellent poems of Cooper's Hill and Windsor Forest, the one written by Sir John Denham, the other by Mr. Pope, will show a great deal of candour if they approve of this.'

DR. GARTH,

Of the Epistle of Eloisa, we are told by the obscure writer of a poem called Sawney, 'That because Prior's Henry and Emma charmed the finest tastes, our author writ his Eloisa in opposition to it, but forgot innocence and virtue: if you take away her tender thoughts, and her fierce desires, all the rest is of no value.' In which, methinks, his judgment resembleth that of a French tailor

But very contrary hereunto was the opinion of himself, saying, in his *Alma*²⁰,

'O Abelard! ill-fated youth,
Thy tale will justify this truth:
But well I weet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song:
Dan Pope, for thy misfortune grieved,
With kind concern and skill has weaved
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless,' &c.

Come we now to his translation of the Iliad, celebrated by numerous pens; yet it shall suffice to mention the indefatigable who (though otherwise a severe censurer of our author) yet styleth this 'a laudable Translation'²¹:

SIR RICHARD BLACKMORE, KNT.

That ready writer,

MR. OLDMIXON,

in his fore-mentioned Essay, frequently commends the same. And the painful

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

thus extols it²²: 'The spirit of Homer breathes all through this translation:—I am in doubt whether I should most admire the justness to the original, or the force and beauty of the language, or the sounding variety of the numbers; but when I find all these meet, it puts me in mind of what the poet says of one of his heroes, that he alone raised and flung with ease a weighty stone that two common men could not lift from the ground; just so one single person has performed in this translation, what I once despaired to have seen done by the force of several masterly hands.' Indeed the same gentleman appears to have changed his sentiment in his Essay on the Art of Sinking in Reputation, (printed in MIST'S JOURNAL, March 30, 1728,) where he says thus: 'In order to sink in reputation, let him take into his head to descend into Homer, (let the world wonder, as it will, how the devil he got there) and pretend to do him into English, so his version denotes the neglect of the manner how.' Strange variation! We are told in

MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8,

'That this translation of the Iliad was not in all respects conformable to the fine taste of his friend Mr. Addison; insomuch that he employed a younger Muse in an undertaking of this kind, which he supervised himself.' Whether Mr. Addison did find it conformable to his taste or not, best appears from his own testimony the year following its publication, in these words:

MR. ADDISON, FREEHOLDER, NO. 40.

'When I consider myself as a British freeholder, I am in a particular manner pleased with the labours of those who have improved our language with the translations of old Greek and Latin authors.—We have already most of their historians in our own tongue, and what is more for the honour of our language, it hath been taught to express with elegance the greatest of their poets in each nation. The illiterate among our own countrymen may learn to judge from Dryden's Virgil of the most perfect epic performance; and those parts of Homer which have been published already by Mr. Pope, give us reason to think that the Iliad will appear in English with as little disadvantage to that immortal poem.'

As to the rest, there is a slight mistake; for this younger Muse was an elder: nor was the gentleman (who is a friend of our author) employed by Mr. Addison to translate it after him, since he saith himself that he did it before²³. Contrariwise, that Mr. Addison engaged our author in this work, appeareth by declaration thereof in the Preface to the Iliad, printed some time before his death, and by his own letters of October 26, and November 2, 1713, where he declares it is his opinion, that no other person was equal to it.

Next comes his Shakspeare on the stage; 'Let him (quoth one, whom I take to be

MR. THEOBALD, MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8, 1728)

and forget to discharge even the dull duty of an his name (for a competent sum of money) to promote the credit of an exorbitant subscription.' Gentle reader, be pleased to cast thine eye on the proposal below quoted, and on what follows (some months after the former assertion) in the same Journal of June 8: 'The bookseller proposed the book by subscription, and raised some thousands of pounds for the same: I believe the gentleman did not share in the profits of this extravagant subscription.'

'After the Iliad, he undertook (saith

MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8, 1728,)

the sequel of that work, the Odyssey; and having secured the success by a numerous subscription, he employed some underlings to perform what, according to his proposals, should come from his own hands.' To which heavy charge we can, in truth, oppose nothing but the words of

MR. POPE'S PROPOSALS FOR THE ODYSSEY,

(Printed for J. Watts, Jan. 10, 1724.)

'I take this occasion to declare, that the subscription for Shakspeare belongs wholly to Mr. Tonson: and that the benefit of this proposal is not solely for my own use, but for that of two of my friends, who have assisted me in this work.' But these very gentlemen are extolled above our poet himself in another of MIST'S JOURNALS, March 30, 1728, saying, 'That he would not advise Mr. Pope to try the experiment again of getting a great part of a book done by assistants, lest those extraneous parts should unhappily ascend to the sublime, and retard the declension of the whole.' Behold! these underlings are become good writers!

If any say, that before the said proposals were printed, the subscription was begun, without declaration of such assistance; verily those who set it on foot, or (as the term is) secured it, to wit, the right honourable the Lord Viscount Harcourt, were he living, would testify; and the right honourable the Lord Bathurst, now living, doth testify, the same is a falsehood.

Sorry I am that persons professing to be learned, or of whatever rank of authors, should either falsely tax, or be falsely taxed. Yet let us, who are only reporters, be impartial in our citations, and proceed.

MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8, 1728.

Mr. Addison raised this author from obscurity, obtained him the acquaintance and friendship of the whole body of our nobility, and transferred his powerful interests with those great men to this rising bard, who frequently levied, by that means, unusual contributions on the public.' Which surely cannot be, if, as the author of the Dunciad Dissected reporteth, 'Mr. Wycherley had before introduced him into a familiar acquaintance with the greatest peers and brightest wits then living.'

'No sooner (saith the same Journalist) was his body lifeless, but this author, reviving his resentment, libelled the memory of his departed friend; and, what was still more heinous, made the scandal public.' Grievous the accusation! unknown the accuser! the person accused no witness in his own cause ; the person, in whose regard accused, dead ! But if there be living any one nobleman whose friendship, yea, any one gentleman whose subscription, Mr. Addison procured to our author, let him stand forth, that truth may appear ! Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, sed magis amica veritas. In verity, the whole story of the libel is a lie ; witness those persons of integrity who, several years before Mr. Addison's decease, did see and approve of the said verses, in no wise a libel, but a friendly rebuke, sent privately, in our author's own hand, to Mr. Addison himself, and never made public, till after their own Journals and Curl had printed the same. One name alone, which I am here authorized to declare, will sufficiently evince the truth, that of the right honourable the Earl of Burlington.

Next is he taxed with a crime (in the opinion of some authors, I doubt, more heinous than any in morality) to wit, plagiarism, from the inventive and quaint-conceited

JAMES MOORE SMITH, GENT.

'²⁴ Upon reading the third volume of Pope's Miscellanies, I found five lines which I thought excellent ; and happening to praise them, a gentleman produced a modern comedy (the Rival Modes) published last year, where were the same verses to a tittle.

'These gentlemen are undoubtedly the first plagiarists, that pretend to make a reputation by stealing from a man's works in his own lifetime, and out of a public print.' Let us join to this

what is written by the author of the Rival Modes, the said Mr. James Moore Smith, in a letter to our author himself, who had informed him, a month before that play was acted, Jan. 27, 1726-7, 'That these verses, which he had before given him leave to insert in it, would be known for his, some copies being got abroad.' He desires, nevertheless, that 'since the lines had been read in his comedy to several, Mr. P. would not deprive it of them, &c. Surely if we add the testimonies of the Lord Bolingbroke, of the lady to whom the said verses were originally addressed, of Hugh Bethel, Esq. and others, who knew them as our author's long before the said gentleman composed his play, it is hoped the ingenuous, that affect not error, will rectify their opinion by the suffrage of such honourable personages.

And yet followeth another charge, insinuating no less than his enmity both to Church and State, which could come from no other informer than the said

MR. JAMES MOORE SMITH.

'²⁵ The Memoirs of a Parish Clerk was a very dull and unjust abuse of a person who wrote in defence of our religion and constitution, and who has been dead many years.' This seemeth also most untrue, it being known to divers that these Memoirs were written at the seat of the Lord Harcourt, in Oxfordshire, before that excellent person's (Bishop Burnet) death, and many years before the appearance of that history of which they are pretended to be an abuse. Most true it is, that Mr. Moore had such a design, and was himself the man who pressed Dr. Arbuthnot and Mr. Pope to assist him therein; and that he borrowed those Memoirs of our author, when that history came forth, with intent to turn them to such abuse: but being able to obtain from our author but one single hint, and either changing his mind, or having more mind than ability, he contented himself to keep the said Memoirs, and read them as his own to all his acquaintance. A noble person there is into whose company Mr. Pope once chanced to introduce him, who well remembereth the conversation of Mr. Moore to have turned upon the 'contempt he had for the work of that reverend prelate, and how full he was of a design he declared himself to have of exposing it.' This noble person is the Earl of Peterborough.

Here, in truth, should we crave pardon of all the aforesaid right honourable and worthy personages, for having mentioned them in the same page with such weekly riff-raff railers and rhymers, but that we had their ever-honoured commands for the same; and that they are introduced not as witnesses in the controversy, but as witnesses that cannot be controverted; not to dispute, but to decide.

Certain it is, that dividing our writers into two classes, of such who were acquaintance, and of such who were strangers, to our author; the former are those who speak well, and the other those who speak evil of him. Of the first class, the most noble sums up his character in these lines :

' ²⁶ And yet so wondrous, so sublime a thing,
As the great Iliad, scarce could make me sing,
Unless I justly could at once commend
A good companion, and as firm a friend :
One moral, or a mere well-natured deed,
Can all desert in sciences exceed.'

So also is he deciphered by the honourable

SIMON HARCOURT.

' ²⁷ Say, wondrous youth, what column wilt thou choose,
What laurel'd arch for thy triumphant Muse ?
Though each great ancient court thee to his shrine,
Though every laurel through the dome be thine—
Go to the good and just, an awful train !
Thy soul's delight.'

Recorded in like manner, for his virtuous disposition and gentle bearing, by the ingenious

MR. WALTER HART,

in this apostrophe :

' ²⁸ O ! ever worthy, ever crown'd with praise !
Bless'd in thy life, and bless'd in all thy lays,
Add, that the Sisters every thought refine,
And e'en thy life be faultless as thy line :
Yet Envy still with fiercer rage pursues,
Obscures the virtue, and defames the Muse.
A soul like thine, in pain, in grief, resign'd,
Views with just scorn the malice of mankind.'

The witty and moral satirist,

DR. EDWARD YOUNG,

wishing some check to the corruption and evil manners of the times, calleth out upon our poet to undertake a task so worthy of his virtue :

²⁶ Verses to Mr. P. on his Translation of Homer,

Nor bears that virtue, which he loves, complain.’

For wit supreme is but his second praise.’

MR. HAMMOND,

his Love Elegies, Elegy xiv.

‘ Now fired by Pope and virtue, leave the age,
In low pursuit of self-undoing wrong,

Whose blameless life still answers to his song.’

MR. THOMSON,

in his elegant and philosophical poem of the Seasons :

‘ Although not sweeter his own Homer sings,
Yet is his life the more endearing song.’

To the same tune also singeth that learned clerk of Suffolk,

MR. WILLIAM BROOME :

‘ Thus³⁰ nobly rising in fair Virtue’s cause,
From thy own life transcribe the’ unerring laws.’

And, to close all, hear the Reverend Dean of St.
Patrick’s :

‘ A soul with every virtue fraught,
By patriots, priests, and poets taught :
Whose filial piety excels
Whatever Grecian story tells.
A genius for each business fit,
Whose meanest talent is his wit,’ &c.

²⁹ Universal Passion, Sat. i.

³⁰ In his Poems, and at the end of the Odyssey.

Let us now recreate thee by turning to the other side, and showing his character drawn by those with whom he never conversed, and whose countenances he could not know, though turned against him ; first, again commencing with the high-voiced and never-enough quoted

MR. JOHN DENNIS ;

who, in his Reflections on the Essay on Criticism, thus describeth him : ‘ A little affected hypocrite, who has nothing in his mouth but candour, truth, friendship, good-nature, humanity, and magnanimity. He is so great a lover of falsehood, that whenever he has a mind to calumniate his contemporaries, he brands them with some defect which is just contrary to some good quality for which all their friends and their acquaintance commend them. He seems to have a particular pique to people of quality, and authors of that rank. He must derive his religion from St. Omers.’—But in the Character of Mr. P. and his writings, (printed by S. Popping, 1716) he saith, ‘ though he is a professor of the worst religion, yet he laughs at it ;’—‘ but that, nevertheless, he is a virulent Papist ; and yet a pillar for the Church of England.’ Of both which opinions seems also to be ; declaring, in MIST’S JOURNAL of June 22, 1718, ‘ that, if he is not shrewdly abused, he made it his duty to cackle to both parties in their own sentiments. But as to his pique against people of quality, the same Journalist doth not agree, but saith, (May 8, 1728,)

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

' He had, by some means or other, the acquaintance and friendship of the whole body of our nobility.'

However contradictory this may appear, Mr. Dennis and Gildon, in the character last cited, make it all plain, by assuring us, ' that he is a creature that reconciles all contradictions: he is a beast, and a man; a Whig and a Tory; a writer (at one and the same time) of Guardians and *Examiners*³¹; an assertor of liberty, and of the dispensing power of kings; a Jesuitical professor of truth; a base and a foul pretender to candour.' So that upon the whole account, we must conclude him either to have been a hypocrite, or a very honest man; a terrible imposer upon both parties, or very moderate to either.

Be it as to the judicious reader shall seem good. Sure it is he is little favoured of certain authors whose wrath is perilous: for one declares he ought to have a price set on his head, and to be hunted down as a wild beast³²; another protests that he does not know what may happen; advises him to insure his person; says he has bitter enemies, and expressly declares it will be well if he escapes with his life³³. One desires he would cut his own throat, or hang himself³⁴. But Pasquin seemed rather inclined it should be done by the government, representing him engaged in grievous designs with a Lord of Parliament then under prosecution³⁵. Mr. Dennis himself hath written to a minister, that he is one of the most dangerous persons in this kingdom³⁶; and assureth the public that he is an open and mortal enemy to his country; a monster that will, one day, show as daring a soul as a mad Indian, who runs a-muck to kill the first Christian he meets³⁷. Another gives information of treason discovered in his poem³⁸. Mr. Curl boldly supplies an imperfect verse with kings and princesses³⁹; and one Matthew Concanen, yet more impudent, publishes at length the two most sacred names in this nation as members of the Dunciad⁴⁰!

This is prodigious! yet it is almost as strange that, in the midst of these invectives, his greatest enemies have (I know not how) borne testimony to some merit in him.

O MR. THEOBALD,

in censuring his Shakspeare, declares, 'he has so great an esteem for Mr. Pope, and so high an opinion of his genius and excellencies, that notwithstanding he professes a veneration almost rising to idolatry for the writings of this inimitable poet, he would be very loth even to do him justice at the expense of that other gentleman's character'⁴¹.

MR. CHARLES GILDON,

after having violently attacked him in many pieces, at last came to wish from his heart, 'that Mr. Pope would be prevailed upon to give us Ovid's Epistles by his hand; for it is certain we see the original of Sappho to Phaon with much more life and likeness in his version than in that of Sir Car Scrope. And this (he adds) is the more to be wished, because in the English tongue we have scarce any thing truly and naturally written upon Love⁴².' He also, in taxing Sir Richard Blackmore for his heterodox opinions of Homer, challenges him to answer what Mr. Pope hath said in his preface to that poet.

MR. OLDMIXON

calls him a great master of our tongue; declares 'the purity and perfection of the English language to be found in his Homer; saying there are more good verses in Dryden's Virgil than in any other work, except this of our author only⁴³.'

THE AUTHOR OF A LETTER TO MR. CIBBER,

' 'Tis true, if finest notes alone could show

Although he says, ' the smooth numbers of the Dunciad are all that recommend it, nor has it any other merit ;' yet that same paper hath these words : ' the author is allowed to be a perfect master of an easy and elegant versification. In all his works we find the most happy turns, and natural similies, wonderfully short and thick sown.'

The Essay on the Dunciad also owns, p. 25, it is very full of beautiful images. But the panegyric, which crowns all that can be said on this poem, is bestowed by our Laureat, who 'grants it to be a better poem of its kind than ever was writ:' but adds, 'it was a victory over a parcel of poor wretches, whom it was almost cowardice to conquer:—a man might as well triumph for having killed so many silly flies that offended him. Could he have let them alone, by this time, poor souls! they had all been buried in oblivion ⁴⁷.' Here we see our excellent Laureat allows the justice of the satire on every man in it but himself, as the great Mr. Dennis did before him.

—The height of my ambition is to please men of the best judgment; and finding that I have entertained my master agreeably, I have the extent of the reward of my labour.

Sir,

I had not the opportunity of hearing of your excellent pamphlet till this day. I am infinitely satisfied and pleased with it, and hope you will meet with that encouragement your admirable performance deserves, &c.

CH. GILDON.

'Now is it not plain that any one who sends such compliments to another, had not been used to write in partnership with him to whom he sends them?' Dennis, Remarks on the Dunciad, p. 50. Mr. Dennis is therefore welcome to take this piece to himself.

‘ that some men of good understanding value him for his rhymes.’ And (p. 17) ‘ That he has got, like Mr. Bayes in the Rehearsal, (that is, like Mr. Dryden) a notable knack at rhyming, and writing smooth verse.’

Of his Essay on Man, numerous were the praises bestowed by his avowed enemies, in the imagination that the same was not written by him, as it was printed anonymously.

Thus sang of it even

BEZALEEL MORRIS.

‘ Auspicious bard! while all admire thy strain,
All but the selfish, ignorant, and vain;
I, whom no bribe to servile flattery drew,
Must pay the tribute to thy merit due;
Thy Muse sublime, significant, and clear,
Alike informs the soul, and charms the ear.’

MR. LEONARD WELSTED

thus wrote ⁴⁹ to the unknown author, on the first publication of the said Essay: ‘ I must own, after the reception which the vilest and most immoral ribaldry hath lately met with, I was surprised to see what I had long despaired, a performance deserving the name of a poet. Such, sir, is your work. It is, indeed, above all commendation, and ought to have been published in an age and country more worthy of it. If my testimony be of weight any where, you are sure to have it in the amplest manner,’ &c. &c. &c.

Thus we see every one of his works hath been extolled by one or other of his most inveterate enemies; and to the success of them all, they do unanimously give testimony. But it is sufficient, instar omnium, to behold the great critic, Mr. Dennis, sorely lamenting it, even from the Essay on Criticism to this day of the Dunciad! 'A most notorious instance (quoth he) of the depravity of genius and taste, the approbation this Essay meets with ⁵⁰.—I can safely affirm, that I never attacked any of these writings, unless they had success infinitely beyond their merit.—This, though an empty, has been a popular scribbler. The epidemic madness of the times has given him reputation ⁵¹.—If, after the cruel treatment so many extraordinary men (Spenser, Lord Bacon, Ben Jonson, Milton, Butler, Otway, and others) have received from this country for these last hundred years, I should shift the scene, and show all that penury changed at once to riot and profuseness, and more squandered away upon one object than would have satisfied the greater part of those extraordinary men; the reader, to whom this one creature should be unknown, would fancy him a prodigy of art and nature; would believe that all the great qualities of these persons were centred in him alone.—But if I should venture to assure him that the people of England had made such a choice—the reader would either believe me a malicious enemy and slanderer, or that the reign of the last (Queen Anne's) ministry was designed by fate to encourage fools ⁵².'

But it happens that this our poet never had any place, pension, or gratuity, in any shape, from the said glorious queen, or any of her ministers. All he owed, in the whole course of his life, to any court, was a subscription for his Homer of 200*l.* from King George I. and 100*l.* from the prince and princess.

However, lest we imagine our author's success was constant and universal, they acquaint us of certain works in a less degree of repute, whereof, although owned by others, yet do they assure us he is the writer. Of this sort, Mr. Dennis⁵³ ascribes to him two Farces, whose names he does not tell, but assures us that there is not one jest in them; and an imitation of Horace, whose title he does not mention, but assures us it is much more execrable than all his works⁵⁴. THE DAILY JOURNAL, May 11, 1728, assures us, 'He is below Tom Durfey in the drama; because (as that writer thinks) the Marriage-Hater Matched, and the Boarding-School, are better than the What-d'ye-call it;' which is not Mr. P.'s but Mr. Gay's. Mr. Gildon assures us, in his New Rehearsal, p. 48, 'that he was writing a play of the Lady Jane Grey;' but it afterwards proved to be Mr. Rowe's. We are assured by another, 'He wrote a pamphlet called Dr. Andrew Tripe'⁵⁵;' which proved to be one Dr. Wagstaff's. Mr. Theobald assures us, in MIST of the 27th of April, 'That the treatise of the Profound is very dull, and that Mr. Pope is the author of it.' The writer of Gulliveriana is of another opinion; and says, 'the whole, or greatest part, of the merit of this treatise must and can only be ascribed to Gulliver⁵⁶.’ [Here, gentle reader! cannot I but smile at the strange blindness and positiveness of men, knowing the said treatise to appertain to none other but to me, Martinus Scriblerus.]

We are assured, in MIST of June 8, ‘That his own plays and farces would better have adorned the Dunciad than those of Mr. Theobald; for he had neither genius for tragedy nor comedy.’ Which, whether true or not, it is not easy to judge, in as much as he had attempted neither; unless we will take it for granted, with Mr. Cibber, that his being once very angry at hearing a friend’s play abused, was an infallible proof the play was his own; the said Mr. Cibber thinking it impossible for a man to be much concerned for any but himself: ‘Now let any man judge (saith he) by this concern, who was the true mother of the child⁵⁷.’

But from all that hath been said, the discerning reader will collect, that it little availed our author to have any candour, since, when he declared he did not write for others, it was not credited; as little to have any modesty, since, when he declined writing in any way himself, the presumption of others was imputed to him. If he singly enterprised one great work, he was taxed of boldness and madness to a prodigy⁵⁸: if he took assistants in another, it was complained of, and represented as a great injury to the public⁵⁹. The loftiest heroics, the lowest ballads, treatises against the state or church, satires on lords and ladies, railery on wits and authors, squabbles with book-sellers, or even full and true accounts of monsters, poisons, and murders; of any hereof was there nothing so good, nothing so bad, which had not, at one or other season, been to him ascribed. If it bore no author's name, then lay he concealed; if it did, he fathered it upon that author to be yet better concealed: if it resembled any of his styles, then was it evident; if it did not, then disguised he it on set purpose. Yea, even direct oppositions in religion, principles, and politics, have equally been supposed in him inherent. Surely a most rare and singular character! of which let the reader make what he can.

Doubtless most commentators would hence take occasion to turn all to their author's advantage, and, from the testimony of his very enemies, would affirm, that his capacity was boundless as well as his imagination: that he was a perfect master of all styles, and all arguments; and that there was in those times no other writer, in any kind, of any degree of excellence, save he himself. But as this is not our own sentiment, we shall determine on nothing; but leave thee, gentle reader, to steer thy judgment equally between various opinions, and to choose whether thou wilt incline to the testimonies of authors avowed, or of authors concealed; of those who knew him, or of those who knew him not. MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS

OF THE POEM.

THIS poem, as it celebrateth the most grave and ancient of things, Chaos, Night, and Dulness; so is it of the most grave and ancient kind. Homer (saith Aristotle) was the first who gave the form, and (saith Horace) who adapted the measure, to heroic poesy. But even before this may be rationally presumed, from what the ancients have left written, was a piece by Homer, composed of like nature and matter with this of our poet; for of epic sort it appeareth to have been, yet of matter surely not unpleasant, witness what is reported of it by the learned Archbishop Eustathius, in Odyssey X. And accordingly Aristotle, in his Poetic, chap. iv. doth further set forth, that as the Iliad and Odyssey gave an example to tragedy, so did this poem to comedy its first idea.

From these authors also it should seem that the hero, or chief personage of it, was no less obscure, and his understanding and sentiments no less quaint and strange (if indeed not more so) than any of the actors of our poem. Margites was the name of this personage, whom antiquity recordeth to have been Dunce the first; and surely, from what we hear of him, not unworthy to be the root of so spreading a tree, and so numerous a posterity. The poem, therefore, celebrating him, was properly and absolutely a Dunciad; which though now unhappily lost, yet is its nature sufficiently known by the infallible tokens aforesaid. And thus it doth appear that the first Dunciad was the first epic poem written by Homer himself, and anterior even to the Iliad or Odyssey.

Now, forasmuch as our poet hath translated those two famous works of Homer which are yet left, he did conceive it in some sort his duty to imitate that also which was lost; and was therefore induced to bestow on it the same form which Homer's is reported to have had, namely, that of epic poem; with a title also framed after the ancient Greek manner, to wit, that of Dunciad.

Wonderful it is that so few of the moderns have been stimulated to attempt some Dupciad! since, in the opinion of the multitude, it might cost less pain and toil than an imitation of the greater epic. But possible it is also that, on due reflection, the maker might find it easier to paint a Charlemagne, a Brute, or a Godfrey, with just pomp and dignity heroic, than a Margites, a Codrus, or a Fleckno.

We shall next declare the occasion and the cause which moved our poet to this particular work. He lived in those days when (after Providence had permitted the invention of printing as a scourge for the sins of the learned) paper also became so cheap, and printers so numerous, that a deluge of authors covered the land; whereby not only the peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applause, yea of his money, by such as would neither earn the one nor deserve the other. At the same time the licence of the press was such, that it grew dangerous to refuse them either; for they would forthwith publish slanders unpunished, the authors being anonymous, and sculking under the wings of publishers, a set of men who neither scrupled to vend either calumny or blasphemy, as long as the town would call for it.

¹ Now our author, living in those times, did conceive it an endeavour well worthy an honest satirist, to dissuade the dull, and punish the wicked, the only way there was left. In that public spirited view he laid the plan of this poem, as the greatest service he was capable (without much hurt, or being slain) to render his dear country. First taking things from their original, he considereth the causes creative of such authors, namely, Dulness and Poverty; the one born with them, the other contracted by neglect of their proper talents, through self-conceit of greater abilities. This truth he wrappeth in an allegory² (as the construction of epic poesy requireth) and feigns that one of these goddesses had taken up her abode with the other, and that they jointly inspired all such writers and such works³. He proceedeth to show the qualities they bestow on these authors, and the effects they produce⁴; then the materials, or stock, with which they furnish them⁵; and (above all) that self-opinion⁶ which causeth it to seem to themselves vastly greater than it is, and is the prime motive of their setting up in this sad and sorry merchandise. The great power of these goddesses acting in alliance (whereof as the one is the mother of industry, so is the other of plodding) was to be exemplified in some one great and remarkable action⁷: and none could be more so than that which our poet hath chosen, viz. the restoration of the reign of Chaos and Night, by the ministry of Dulness, their daughter, in the removal of her imperial seat from the city to the polite world; as the action of the Æneid is the restoration of the empire of Troy, by the removal of the race from thence to Latium. But as Homer, singing only the wrath of Achilles, yet includes in his poem the whole history of the Trojan war; in like manner, our author has drawn into this single action the whole history of Dulness and her children.

A person must next be fixed upon to support this action. This phantom, in the poet's mind, must have a name⁸. He finds it to be —; and he becomes of course the hero of the poem.

The fable being thus, according to the best example, one and entire, as contained in the proposition; the machinery is a continued chain of allegories, setting forth the whole power, ministry; and empire of Dulness, extended through her subordinate instruments, in all her various operations.

This is branched into episodes, each of which hath its moral apart, though all conducive to the main end. The crowd assembled in the second Book demonstrates the design to be more extensive than to bad poets only, and that we may expect other episodes of the patrons, encouragers, or paymasters, of such authors, as occasion shall bring them forth. And the third Book, if well considered, seemeth to embrace the whole world. Each of the games relateth to some or other vile class of writers. The first concerneth the plagiarist, to whom he giveth the name of Moore; the second the libellous novelist, whom he styleth Eliza; the third, the flattering dedicatour; the fourth, the bawling critic, or noisy poet: the fifth, the dark and dirty party-writer; and so of the rest; assigning to each some proper name or other, such as he could find.

As for the characters, the public hath already acknowledged how justly they are drawn. The manners are so depicted, and the sentiments so peculiar to those to whom applied, that surely to transfer them to any other or wiser personages would be exceeding difficult; and certain it is, that every person concerned, being consulted apart, hath readily owned the resemblance of every portrait, his own excepted. So Mr. Cibber calls them 'a parcel of poor wretches, so many silly flies'; but adds, 'our author's wit is remarkably more bare and barren whenever it would fall foul on Cibber than upon any other person whatever.'

The descriptions are singular, the comparisons very quaint, the narration various, yet of one colour; the purity and chastity of diction is so preserved, that in the places most suspicious, not the words, but only the images, have been censured; and yet are those images no other than have been sanctified by ancient and classical authority, (though, as was the manner of those good times, not so curiously wrapped up) yea, and commented upon by the most grave doctors and approved critics.

⁹ Cibber's Letter to Mr. P. p. 9. 12. 41.

As it beareth the name of epic, it is thereby subjected to such severe indispensable rules as are laid on all neoterics, a strict imitation of the ancients; insomuch that any deviation, accompanied with whatever poetic beauties, hath always been censured by the sound critic. How exact that imitation hath been in this piece, appeareth not only by its general structure, but by particular allusions infinite, many whereof have escaped both the commentator and poet himself; yea divers, by his exceeding diligence, are so altered and interwoven with the rest, that several have already been, and more will be, by the ignorant abused, as altogether and originally his own.

In a word, the whole poem proveth itself to be the work of our author, when his faculties were in full vigour and perfection; at that exact time when years have ripened the judgment without diminishing the imagination; which, by good critics, is held to be punctually at forty: for at that season it was that Virgil finished his Georgics; and Sir Richard Blackmore, at the like age, composing his Arthurs, declared the same to be the very acme and pitch of life for epic poesy; though, since, he hath altered it to sixty, the year in which he published his *Alfred*¹⁰. True it is that the talents for criticism, namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark, certainty of asseveration, indeed all but acerbity, seem rather the gifts of youth than of riper age: but it is far otherwise in poetry; witness the works of Mr. Rymer and Mr. Dennis, who, beginning with criticism, became afterwards such poets as no age hath paralleled. With good reason, therefore, did our author choose to write his Essay on that subject at twenty, and reserve for his maturer years this great and wonderful work of THE DUNCIAD. P.

RICARDUS ARISTARCHUS

OF THE HERO OF THE POEM.

OF the nature of Dunciad in general, whence derived, and on what authority founded, as well as of the art and conduct of this our poem in particular, the learned and laborious Scriblerus hath, according to his manner, and with tolerable share of judgment, dissertated: but when he cometh to speak of the person of the hero fitted for such poem, in truth he miserably halts and hallucinates: for, misled by one Monsieur Bossu, a Gallic critic, he prateth of I cannot tell what phantom of a hero, only raised up to support the fable. A putrid conceit! as if Homer and Virgil, like modern undertakers, who first build their house, and then seek out for a tenant, had contrived the story of a war and a wandering before they once thought either of Achilles or Æneas. We shall therefore set our good brother, and the world also, right in this particular, by assuring them that, in the greater epic, the prime intention of the Muse is to exalt heroic virtue, in order to propagate the love of it among the children of men; and, consequently, that the poet's first thought must needs be turned upon a real subject meet for laud and celebration; not one whom he is to make, but one whom he may find truly illustrious. This is the primum mobile of this poetic world, whence every thing is to receive life and motion: for this subject being found, he is immediately ordained, or rather acknowledged, an hero, and put upon such action as befitteth the dignity of his character.

But the Muse ceaseth not here her eagle-flight: for sometimes, satiated with the contemplation of these suns of glory, she turneth downward on her wing, and darts with Jove's lightning on the goose and serpent kind. For we apply to the Muse, in her various moods, what an ancient master of wisdom affirmeth of the gods in general 'Si Dii non irascuntur impiis et injustis, nec pios utique justosque diligunt. In rebus enim diversis, ut in utramque partem moveri necesse est, aut in neutram. Itaque qui bonos diligit, et malos odit; et qui malos non odit, nec bonos diligit. Quia et diligere bonos ex odio malorum venit; et malos odisse ex bonorum caritate descendit.' Which, in our vernacular idiom may be thus interpreted: 'If the gods be not provoked at evil men, neither are they delighted with the good and just; for contrary objects must either excite contrary affections or no affections at all. So that he who loveth good men must at the same time hate the bad; and he who hateth not bad men cannot love the good; because to love good men proceedeth from an aversion to evil, and to hate evil men from a tenderness to the good.' From this delicacy of the Muse arose the little epic (more lively and cholerick than her elder sister, whose bulk and complexion incline her to the phlegmatic); and for this some notorious vehicle of vice and folly was sought out to make thereof an example; an early instance of which (nor could it escape the accurate Scriblerus) the father himself of epic poem affordeth us. From him the practice descended to the Greek dramatic poets, his offspring; who, in the composition of their tetralogy, or set of four pieces, were wont to make the last a satiric tragedy. Happily one of these ancient Dunciads (as we may well term it) is come down unto us, amongst the tragedies of the poet Euripides. And what doth the reader suppose may be the subject thereof? Why, in truth, and it is worthy observation, the unequal contest of an old, dull, debauched buffoon, Cyclops, with the heaven-directed favourite of Minerva: who, after having quietly borne all the monster's obscene and impious ribaldry, endeth the farce in punishing him with the mark of an indelible brand in his forehead. May we not then be excused if, for the future, we consider the epics of Homer, Virgil, and Milton, together with this our poem, as a complete tetralogy, in which the last worthily holdeth the place or station of the satiric piece?

Proceed we therefore in our subject. It hath been long, and alas for pity! still remaineth a question, whether the hero of the greater epic should be an honest man; or, as the French critics express it, *un honnête homme*¹: but it never admitted of any doubt but that the hero of the little epic should be his very opposite. Hence, to the advantage of our Dunciad, we may observe how much juster the moral of that poem must needs be where so important a question is previously decided.

But then it is not every knave, nor (let me add) every fool, that is a fit subject for a Dunciad.—There must still exist some analogy, if not resemblance of qualities between the heroes of the two poems; and this, in order to admit what neoteric critics call the parody, one of the liveliest graces of the little epic. Thus it being agreed that the constituent qualities of the greater epic hero are wisdom, bravery, and love, from whence springeth heroic virtue; it followeth that those of the lesser epic hero should be vanity, assurance, and debauchery: from which happy assemblage resulteth heroic dulness, the never-dying subject of this our poem.

This being confessed, come we now to particulars. It is the character of true wisdom to seek its chief support and confidence within itself, and to place that support in the resources which proceed from a conscious rectitude of will.—And are the advantages of vanity, when arising to the heroic standard, at all short of this self-complacency? nay, are they not, in the opinion of the enamoured owner, far beyond it? ‘Let the world (will such an one say) impute to me what folly or weakness they please; but till wisdom can give me something that will make me more heartily happy, I am contented to be gazed at¹.’ This, we see, is vanity, according to the heroic gauge or measure: not that low and ignoble species which pretendeth to virtues we have not; but the laudable ambition of being gazed at for glorying in those vices which every body knows we have. 'The world may ask (says he) why I make my follies public? Why not? I have passed my time very pleasantly with them ³.' In short, there is no sort of vanity such a hero would scruple, but that which might go near to degrade him from his high station in this our Dunciad; namely, 'Whether it would not be vanity in him to take shame to himself for not being a wise man ⁴?'

Bravery, the second attribute of the true hero, is courage manifesting itself in every limb; while its correspondent virtue, in the mock hero, is that same courage all collected into the face: and as power, when drawn together, must needs have more force and spirit than when dispersed, we generally find this kind of courage in so high and heroic a degree, that it insults not only men, but gods. Mezentius is, without doubt, the bravest character in all the Æneis: but how? his bravery, we know, was an high courage of blasphemy. And can we say less of this brave man's? who, having told us that he placed 'his summum bonum in those follies which he was not content barely to possess, but would likewise glory in,' adds, 'If I am misguided, 'tis Nature's fault, and I follow her ⁵.' Nor can we be mistaken in making this happy quality a species of courage, when we consider those illustrious marks of it which made his face 'more known (as he justly boasteth) than most in the kingdom;' and his language to consist of what we must allow to be the most daring figure of speech, that which is taken from the name of God.

Gentle love, the next ingredient in the true hero's composition, is a mere bird of passage, or (as Shakspeare calls it) 'Summer-teeming lust,' and evaporates in the heat of youth; doubtless by that refinement it suffers in passing through those certain strainers which our poet somewhere speaketh of⁶; but when it is let alone to work upon the lees, it acquireth strength by old age, and becometh a lasting ornament to the little epic. It is true, indeed, there is one objection to its fitness for such an use; for not only the ignorant may think it common, but it is admitted to be so even by him who best knoweth its value. 'Don't you think (argueth he) to say only "a man has his whore", ought to go for little or nothing? Because, defendit numerus, take the first ten thousand men you meet, and, I believe, you would be no loser if you betted ten to one that every single sinner of them, one with another, had been guilty of the same frailty⁷.' But here he seemeth not to have done justice to himself: the man is sure enough a hero who hath his lady at fourscore.—How doth his modesty herein lessen the merit of

⁶ Lust, through some certain strainers well refined,
Is gentle love, and charms all womankind.

⁷ Alluding to these lines in the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot:
'And has not Colley still his lord and whore,
His butchers Henley, his free-masons Moore?'

⁸ C. Cibber's Letter to Mr. P. p. 46.

a whole well-spent life! not taking to himself the commendation (which Horace accounted the greatest in a theatrical character) of continuing to the very dregs the same he was from the beginning,

‘ ——— Servetur ad imum
Qualis ab incepto processerat. ’ ———

But here, in justice both to the poet and the hero, let us further remark, that the calling her his whore, implieth she was his own, and not his neighbour's. Truly, a commendable continence! and such as Scipio himself must have applauded: for how much self-denial was exerted not to covet his neighbour's whore! and what disorders must the coveting her have occasioned in that society, where (according to this political calculator) nine in ten of all ages have their concubines!

We have now, as briefly as we could devise, gone through the three constituent qualities of either hero: but it is not in any, nor in all of these, that heroism properly or essentially resideth. It is a lucky result rather from the collision of these lively qualities against one another.— Thus, as from wisdom, bravery, and love, ariseth magnanimity, the object of admiration, which is the aim of the greater epic; so from vanity, impudence, and debauchery, springeth buffoonery, the source of ridicule, that ‘laughing ornament,’ as the owner well termeth it³, of the little epic.

He is not ashamed (God forbid he ever should be ashamed!) of this character, who deemeth that not reason but risibility distinguisheth the human species from the brutal. ‘As Nature (saith this profound philosopher) distinguished our species from the mute creation by our risibility, her design must have been by that faculty as evidently to raise our happiness, as by our os sublime (our erected faces) to lift the dignity of our form above them ¹⁰. All this considered, how complete a hero must he be, as well as how happy a man, whose risibility lieth not barely in his muscles, as in the common sort, but (as himself informeth us) in his very spirits! and whose os sublime is not simply an erect face, but a brazen head; as should seem by his preferring it to one of iron, said to belong to the late King of Sweden ¹¹.

But whatever personal qualities a hero may have, the examples of Achilles and Æneas show us, that all these are of small avail without the constant assistance of the gods; for the subversion and erection of empires have never been adjudged the work of man. How greatly soever then we may esteem of his high talents, we can hardly conceive his personal prowess alone sufficient to restore the decayed empire of Dulness. So weighty an achievement must require the particular favour and protection of the great, who, being the natural patrons and supporters of letters, as the ancient gods were of Troy, must first be drawn off, and engaged in another interest, before the total subversion of them can be accomplished. To surmount, therefore, this last and greatest difficulty, we have, in this excellent man, a professed favourite and intimado of the great. And look of what force ancient piety was to draw the gods into the party of Æneas, that, and much stronger, is modern incense to engage the great in the party of Dulness.

¹⁰ C. Cibber's Life, p. 23, 24.

¹¹ C. Cibber's Letter, p. 8.

Thus have we essayed to portray or shadow out this noble imp of fame. But now the impatient reader will be apt to say, if so many and various graces go to the making up a hero, what mortal shall suffice to bear his character? Ill hath he read who seeth not, in every trace of this picture, that individual all-accomplished person, in whom these rare virtues and lucky circumstances have agreed to meet and concentre, with the strongest lustre and fullest harmony.

The good Scriblerus, indeed, nay the world itself, might be imposed on, in the late spurious editions, by I cannot tell what sham-hero or phantom; but it was not so easy to impose on him whom this egregious error most of all concerned: for no sooner had the fourth Book laid open the high and swelling scene, but he recognised his own heroic acts; and when he came to the words,

‘Soft on her lap her laureat son reclines,’

(though laureat imply no more than one crowned with laurel, as befitteth any associate or consort in empire) he loudly resented this indignity to violated majesty. Indeed, not without cause, he being there represented as fast asleep; so misbecoming the eye of empire, which, like that of Jove, should never doze nor slumber. ‘Ha! (saith he) fast asleep it seems! that is a little too strong. Pert and dull at least you might have allowed me, but as seldom asleep as any fool ¹².' However, the injured laureat may comfort himself with this reflection, that though it be a sleep, yet it is not the sleep of death, but of immortality. Here he will ¹³ live at least, though not awake, and in no worse condition than many an enchanted warrior before him. The famous Durandante, for instance, was, like him, cast into a long slumber by Merlin, the British bard and necromancer; and his example, for submitting to it with a good grace, might be of use to our hero: for that disastrous knight, being sorely pressed or driven to make his answer by several persons of quality ¹⁴, only replied with a sigh, 'Patience, and shuffle the cards ¹⁵.'

But now, as nothing in this world, no not the most sacred and perfect things either of religion or government, can escape the stings of envy, methinks I already hear these carpers objecting to the clearness of our hero's title.

'It would never (say they) have been esteemed sufficient to make an hero for the Iliad or Æneis, that Achilles was brave enough to overturn one empire, or Æneas pious enough to raise another, had they not been goddess-born, and princes bred. What then did this author mean by erecting a player, instead of one of his patrons, (a person "never a hero even on the stage ¹⁶!") to this dignity of colleague in the empire of Dulness, and achiever of a work that neither old Omar, Attila, nor John of Leyden, could entirely bring to pass ?

To all this we have, as we conceive, a sufficient answer from the Roman historian, Fabrum esse suæ quemque fortunæ: ‘ that every man is the carver of his own fortune.’ The politic Florentine, Nicholas Machiavel, goeth still further, and affirmeth that a man needeth but to believe himself a hero to be one of the worthiest. ‘ Let him (saith he) but fancy himself capable of high things, and he will of course be able to achieve them. From this principle it follows that nothing can exceed our hero’s prowess, as nothing ever equalled the greatness of his conceptions. Hear how he constantly paragons himself; at one time to Alexander the Great and Charles XII. of Sweden, for the excess and delicacy of his ambition¹⁷; to Henry IV. of France, for honest policy¹⁸; to the first Brutus, for love of liberty¹⁹; and to Sir Robert Walpole, for good government while in power²⁰. At another time to the godlike Socrates, for his diversions and amusements²¹; to Horace, Montaigne, and Sir William Temple, for an elegant vanity that maketh them for ever read and admired²²: to two Lord Chancellors for law, from whom, when confederate against him at the bar, he carried away the prize of eloquence²³; and to say all in a word, to the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London himself, in the art of writing pastoral letters²⁴.

Nor did his actions fall short of the sublimity of his conceit. In his early youth he met the revolu-

tion²⁵ face to face in Nottingham, at a time when his betters contented themselves with following her. It was here he got acquainted with old Battle array, of whom he hath made so honourable mention in one of his immortal odes²⁶. But he shone in courts as well as in camps: he was called up, when the nation fell in labour of this revolution²⁷, and was a gossip, at her christening, with the bishop and the ladies²⁸.

As to his birth, it is true he pretendeth no relation either to heathen god or goddess; but, what is as good, he was descended from a maker of both²⁹. And that he did not pass himself on the world for a hero, as well by birth as education, was his own fault; for his lineage he bringeth into his life as an anecdote, and is sensible he had it in his power to be thought no body's son at all³⁰: and what is that but coming into the world a hero?

But be it (the punctilious laws of epic poesy so requiring) that a hero of more than mortal birth must needs be had; even for this we have a remedy. We can easily derive our hero's pedigree from a goddess of no small power and authority amongst men; and legitimate and instal him after the right classical and authentic fashion: for, like as the ancient sages found a son of Mars in a mighty warrior, a son of Neptune in a skilful seaman, a son of Phœbus in a harmonious poet; so have we here, if need be, a son of Fortune in an artful gamester : and who fitter than the offspring of Chance to assist in restoring the empire of Night and Chaos ?

There is, in truth, another objection of greater weight, namely,—that this hero still existeth, and hath not yet finished his earthly course. For, if Solon said well,

‘ ——— ultima semper

Expectanda dies homini : dicique beatus

Ante obitum nemo supremæque funera debet :’

‘That no man could be called happy till his death, surely much less can any one, till then, be pronounced a hero; this species of men being far more subject than others to the caprices of fortune and humour.’ But to this also we have an answer, that will (we hope) be deemed decisive. It cometh from himself, who, to cut this matter short, hath solemnly protested that he will never change or amend.

With regard to his vanity, he declareth that nothing shall ever part them. ‘Nature (saith he) hath amply supplied me in vanity; a pleasure which neither the pertness of wit, nor the gravity of wisdom, will ever persuade me to part with³¹.’ Our poet had charitably endeavoured to administer a cure to it; but he telleth us plainly, ‘My superiors, perhaps, may be mended by him; but, for my part, I own myself incorrigible. I look upon my follies as the best part of my fortune³².’ And with good reason: we see to what they have brought him!

Secondly, as to buffoonery, ‘Is it (saith he) a time of day for me to leave off these fooleries, and set up a new character? I can no more put off my follies than my skin : I have often tried, but they stick too close to me; nor am I sure my friends are displeased with them, for in this light I afford them frequent matter of mirth, &c. &c.³³’ Having then so publicly declared himself incorrigible, he is become dead in law, (I mean the law Epopæian) and devolveth upon the poet as his property; who may take him and deal with him like an old Egyptian hero, that is to say, embowel and embalm him for posterity.

Nothing therefore (we conceive) remaineth to hinder his own prophecy of himself from taking immediate effect. A rare felicity! and what few prophets have had the satisfaction to see alive! Nor can we conclude better than with that extraordinary one of his, which is conceived in these oraculous words, ‘ My dulness will find somebody to do it right³⁴.’

‘ Tandem Phœbus adest, morsusque inferre parentem
Congelat, et patulos, ut erant, indurat hiatus³⁵.’

PREFACE

PREFIXED

TO THE FIVE FIRST IMPERFECT EDITIONS

OF

THE DUNCIAD,

In Three Books.

PRINTED AT DUBLIN AND LONDON, IN OCTAVO AND DUODECIMO, 1727.

THE PUBLISHER¹ TO THE READER.

IT will be found a true observation, though somewhat surprising, that when any scandal is vented against a man of the highest distinction and character, either in the state or literature, the public

¹ Who he was is uncertain; but Edward Ward tells us, in his Preface to Durgin, 'That most judges are of opinion this Preface is not of English extraction, but Hibernian,' &c. He means it was written by Dr. Swift, who, whether the publisher or not, may be said, in a sort, to be author of the poem. For when he, together with Mr. Pope, (for reasons specified in the Preface to their Miscellanies) determined to own the most trifling pieces in which they had any hand, and to destroy all that remained in their power, the first sketch of this poem was snatched from the fire by Dr. Swift, who persuaded his friend to proceed in it, and to him it was therefore inscribed. But the occasion of printing it was as follows:

There was published in those Miscellanies a Treatise of the Bathos, or Art of Sinking in Poetry, in which was a chapter where the species of bad writers were ranged in classes, and initial letters of names prefixed, for the most part, at random. But such was the number of poets eminent in that art, that some one or other took every letter to himself. All fell into so violent a fury, that for half a year, in general afford it a most quiet reception, and the larger part accept it as favourably as if it were some kindness done to themselves: whereas, if a known scoundrel or blockhead but chance to be touched upon, a whole legion is up in arms, and it becomes the common cause of all scribblers, booksellers, and printers whatsoever.

Not to search too deeply into the reason hereof, I will only observe as a fact, that every week, for these two months past, the town has been persecuted with pamphlets, advertisements², letters, and weekly essays, not only against the wit and writings, but against the character and person, of Mr. Pope; and that of all those men who have received pleasure from his works, (which by modest or more, the common newspapers (in most of which they had some property, as being hired writers) were filled with the most abusive falsehoods and scurrilities they could possibly devise; a liberty no ways to be wondered at in those people, and in those papers, that for many years, during the uncontrolled licence of the press, had aspersed almost all the great characters of the age; and this with impunity, their own persons and names being utterly secret and obscure. This gave Mr. Pope the thought, that he had now some opportunity of doing good, by detecting and dragging into light these common enemies of mankind; since, to invalidate this universal slander, it sufficed to show what contemptible men were the authors of it. He was not without hopes that, by manifesting the dulness of those who had only malice to recommend them, either the booksellers would not find their account in employing them, or the men themselves, when discovered, want courage to proceed in so unlawful an occupation. This it was that gave birth to the Dunciad; and he thought it an happiness that by the late flood of slander on himself, he had acquired such a peculiar right over their names as was necessary to his design. W.

² See the list of those anonymous papers, with their dates, and authors annexed, inserted before the poem.

computation may be about a hundred thousand³ in these kingdoms of England and Ireland, not to mention Jersey, Guernsey, the Orcades, those in the New World, and foreigners who have translated him into their languages) of all this number not a man hath stood up to say one word in his defence.

The only exception is the author⁴ of the following poem, who doubtless had either a better insight into the grounds of this clamour, or a better opinion of Mr. Pope's integrity, joined with a greater personal love for him than any other of his numerous friends and admirers.

Further, that he was in his peculiar intimacy, appears from the knowledge he manifests of the most private authors of all the anonymous pieces against him, and from his having in this poem⁵ attacked no man living who had not before printed or published some scandal against this gentleman.

³ It is surprising with what stupidity this Preface, which is almost a continued irony, was taken by those authors. All such passages as these were understood by Curl, Cooke, Cibber, and others, to be serious. Hear the Laureat (Letter to Mr. Pope, p. 9.) 'Though I grant the Dunciad a better poem of its kind than ever was writ, yet, when I read it with those vain-glorious incumbrances of notes and remarks upon it, &c.—it is amazing that you, who have writ with such masterly spirit upon the ruling passion, should be so blind a slave to your own, as not to see how far a low avarice of praise,' &c. (taking it for granted that the notes of Scriblerus and others were the author's own.) W.

⁴ A very plain irony, speaking of Mr. Pope himself.

⁵ The publisher, in these words, went a little too far; but it is certain whatever names the reader finds that are unknown to him are of such; and the exception is only of two or three, whose dulness, impudent scurrilities, or self-conceit, all mankind agreed to have justly entitled them to a place in the Dunciad. W.

How I came possessed of it, is no concern to the reader; but it would have been a wrong to him had I detained the publication: since those names which are its chief ornaments die off daily so fast, as must render it too soon unintelligible. If it provoke the author to give us a more perfect edition, I have my end.

Who he is, I cannot say (which is a great pity) there is certainly nothing in his style and manner of writing⁶ which can distinguish or discover him; for if it bears any resemblance to that of Mr. Pope, it is not improbable but it might be done on purpose, with a view to have it pass for his. But by the frequency of his allusions to Virgil, and a laboured (not to say affected) shortness in imitation of him, I should think him more an admirer of the Roman poet than of the Grecian, and in that not of the same taste with his friend.

I have been well informed that this work was the labour of full six years of his life⁷, and that

⁶ This irony had small effect in concealing the author. The Dunciad, imperfect as it was, had not been published two days, but the whole town gave it to Mr. Pope. W.

⁷ This also was honestly and seriously believed by divers gentlemen of the Dunciad. J. Ralph, preface to Sawney; 'We are told it was the labour of six years, with the utmost assiduity and application: it is no great compliment to the author's sense to have employed so large a part of his life,' &c. So also Ward, preface to Durgen: 'The Dunciad, as the publisher very wisely confesses, cost the author six years' retirement from all the pleasures of life; though it is somewhat difficult to conceive, from either its bulk or beauty, that it could be so long in hatching,' &c. But the length of time and closeness of application were mentioned to prepossess the reader with a good opinion of it.

They just as well understood what Scriblerus said of the poem. W.

he wholly retired himself from all the avocations and pleasures of the world to attend diligently to its correction and perfection ; and six years more he intended to bestow upon it, as it should seem by this verse of Statius, which was cited at the head of his manuscript :

‘ Oh mihi bisseuos multum vigilata per annos,
Duncia ⁶!’

Hence also we learn the true title of the poem ; which, with the same certainty as we call that of Homer the Iliad, of Virgil the Æneid, of Camoëns the Lusiad, we may pronounce could have been, and can be, no other than

THE DUNCIAD.

It is styled heroic, as being doubly so ; not only with respect to its nature, which, according to the best rules of the ancients, and strictest ideas of the moderns, is critically such ; but also with regard to the heroical disposition and high courage of the writer, who dared to stir up such a formidable, irritable, and implacable race of mortals.

There may arise some obscurity in chronology from the names in the poem, by the inevitable removal of some authors, and insertion of others in their niches : for, whoever will consider the unity of the whole design, will be sensible that the poem was not made for these authors, but these authors for the poem. I should judge that they were clapped in as they rose, fresh and fresh, and changed from day to day ; in like manner as when the old boughs wither, we thrust new ones into a chimney.

I would not have the reader too much troubled or anxious, if he cannot decipher them ; since, when he shall have found them out, he will probably know no more of the persons than before.

Yet we judged it better to preserve them as they are, than to change them for fictitious names ; by which the satire would only be multiplied, and applied to many instead of one. Had the hero, for instance, been called Codrus, how many would have affirmed him to have been Mr. T., Mr. E., Sir R. B.? &c. but now all that unjust scandal is saved, by calling him by a name which, by good luck, happens to be that of a real person,

TO THE

First Edition with Notes, Quarto, 1729.

It will be sufficient to say of this edition, that the reader has here a much more correct and complete copy of the Dunciad than has hitherto appeared. I cannot answer but some mistakes may have slipped into it, but a vast number of others will be prevented by the names being now not only set at length, but justified by the authorities and reasons given. I make no doubt the author's own motive to use real rather than feigned names, was his care to preserve the innocent from any false application; whereas, in the former editions, which had no more than the initial letters, he was made, by keys printed here, to hurt the inoffensive; and (what was worse) to abuse his friends, by an impression at Dublin.

The commentary which attends this poem was sent me from several hands, and consequently must be unequally written; yet will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures, or at a remote distance of time: and the reader cannot but derive one pleasure from the very obscurity of the persons it treats of, that it partakes of the nature of a secret, which most people love to be let into, though the men or the things be ever so inconsiderable or trivial.

Of the persons, it was judged proper to give some account: for, since it is only in this monument that they must expect to survive, (and here survive they will, as long as the English tongue shall remain such as it was in the reigns of Queen Anne and King George) it seemed but humanity to bestow a word or two upon each, just to tell what he was, what he writ, when he lived, and when he died.

If a word or two more are added upon the chief offenders, it is only as a paper pinned upon the breast to mark the enormities for which they suffered; lest the correction only should be remembered, and the crime forgotten.

In some articles it was thought sufficient barely to transcribe from Jacob, Curl, and other writers of their own rank, who were much better acquainted with them than any of the authors of this comment can pretend to be. Most of them had drawn each other's characters on certain occasions; but the few here inserted are all that could be saved from the general destruction of such works.

Of the part of Scriblerus I need say nothing: his manner is well enough known, and approved by all but those who are too much concerned to be judges.

The imitations of the ancients are added, to gratify those who either never read, or may have forgotten them; together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. If, from the frequency of the former, any man think the poem too much a cento, our poet will but appear to have done the same thing in jest which Boileau did in earnest, and upon which Vida, Fracastorius, and many of the most eminent Latin poets, professedly valued themselves.

TO THE FIRST EDITION OF

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE DUNCIAD,

When printed separately in the Year 1742.

WE apprehend it can be deemed no injury to the author of the three first books of the Dunciad that we publish this fourth. It was found merely by accident, in taking a survey of the library of a late eminent nobleman; but in so blotted a condition, and in so many detached pieces, as plainly showed it to be not only incorrect, but unfinished. That the author of the three first books had a design to extend and complete his poem in this manner, appears from the dissertation prefixed to it, where it is said, that 'The design is more extensive, and that we may expect other episodes to complete it;' and, from the declaration in the argument to the third book, that 'The accomplishment of the prophecies therein, would be the theme hereafter of a greater Dunciad.' But whether or no he be the author of this, we declare ourselves ignorant. If he be, we are no more to be blamed for the publication of it, than Tucca and Varius for that of the last six books of the Æneid, though, perhaps, inferior to the former.

If any person be possessed of a more perfect copy of this work, or of any other fragments of it, and will communicate them to the publisher, we shall make the next edition more complete: in which we also promise to insert any criticisms that shall be published (if at all to the purpose) with the names of the authors ; or any letters sent us (though not to the purpose) shall yet be printed, under the title of Epistolæ obscurorum virorum ; which, together with some others of the same kind, formerly laid by for that end, may make no unpleasant addition to the future impressions of this poem.

TO

THE COMPLETE EDITION OF 1743.

I HAVE long had a design of giving some sort of notes on the works of this poet. Before I had the happiness of his acquaintance, I had written a commentary on his Essay on Man, and have since finished another on the Essay on Criticism. There was one already on the Dunciad, which had met with general approbation ; but I still thought some additions were wanting (of a more serious kind) to the humorous notes of Scriblerus, and even to those written by Mr. Cleland, Dr. Arbuthnot, and others. I had lately the pleasure to pass some months with the author in the country, where I prevailed upon him to do what I had long desired, and favour me with his explanation of several passages in his works. It happened, that just at that juncture was published a ridiculous book against him, full of personal reflections, which furnished him with a lucky opportunity of improving this poem, by giving it the only thing it wanted, a more considerable hero. He was always sensible of its defect in that particular, and owned he had let it pass with the hero it had, purely for want of a better, not entertaining the least expectation that such an one was reserved for this post as has since obtained the laurel : but since that had happened, he could no longer deny this justice either to him or the Dunciad.

And yet, I will venture to say, there was another motive which had still more weight with our author : this person was one who, from every folly (not to say vice) of which another would be ashamed, has constantly derived a vanity ; and therefore was the man in the world who would least be hurt by it.

WHEREAS, upon occasion of certain pieces relating to the gentlemen of the Dunciad, some have been willing to suggest as if they had looked upon them as an abuse : we can do no less than own it is our opinion that to call these gentlemen bad authors is no sort of abuse, but a great truth. We cannot alter this opinion without some reason ; but we promise to do it in respect to every person who thinks it an injury to be represented as no wit, or poet, provided he procures a certificate of his being really such from any three of his companions in the Dunciad, or from Mr. Dennis singly, who is esteemed equal to any three of the number.

MR. DRYDEN AND MR. POPE,

AS DRAWN BY CERTAIN OF THEIR CONTEMPORARIES.

MR. DRYDEN,

HIS POLITICS, RELIGION, MORALS.

MR. DRYDEN is a mere renegado from monarchy, poetry, and good sense¹. A true republican son of monarchical church². A republican atheist³. Dryden was from the beginning an ἀλλοπρόσαλλος, and I doubt not will continue so to the last⁴.

In the poem called Absalom and Achitophel, are notoriously traduced the king, the queen, the lords and gentlemen; not only their honourable persons exposed, but the whole nation and its representatives notoriously libeled. It is scandalum magnatum, yea, of majesty itself⁵.

He looks upon God's gospel as a foolish fable, like the pope, to whom he is a pitiful purveyor⁶. His very Christianity may be questioned⁷. He ought to expect more severity than other men, as he is most unmerciful in his reflections on others⁸. With as good a right as his holiness, he sets up for poetical infallibility⁹.

PARALLEL OF THE CHARACTERS

OF

MR. POPE AND MR. DRYDEN,

AS DRAWN BY CERTAIN OF THEIR CONTEMPORARIES,

MR. POPE,

HIS POLITICS, RELIGION, MORALS.

MR. POPE is an open and mortal enemy to his country, and the commonwealth of learning ¹. Some call him a Popish Whig, which is directly inconsistent ². Pope, as a Papist, must be a Tory and High-flyer ³. He is both a Whig and Tory ⁴.

He hath made it his custom to cackle to more than one party in their own sentiments ⁵.

In his Miscellanies, the persons abused are the king, the queen, his late majesty, both houses of parliament, the privy council, the bench of bishops, the established church, the present ministry, &c. To make sense of some passages, they must be construed into royal scandal ⁶.

He is a Popish rhymester, bred up with a contempt of the Sacred Writings ⁷. His religion allows him to destroy heretics, not only with his pen, but with fire and sword; and such were all those unhappy wits whom he sacrificed to his

MR. DRYDEN ONLY A VERSIFIER.

His whole libel is all bad matter, beautified (which is all that can be said of it) with good metre ¹⁰. Mr. Dryden's genius did not appear in any thing more than his versification, and whether he is to be ennobled for that only is a question ¹¹.

MR. DRYDEN'S VIRGIL.

Tonson calls it Dryden's Virgil, to show that this is not that Virgil so admired in the Augustan age, but a Virgil of another stamp, a silly, impertinent, nonsensical writer ¹². None but a Bavius, a Mævius, or a Bathyllus, carped at Virgil; and none but such unthinking vermin admire his translator ¹³. It is true, soft and easy lines might become Ovid's Epistles or Art of Love—but Virgil, who is all great and majestic, &c. requires strength of lines, weight of words, and closeness of expression; not an ambling muse, running on carpet-ground, and shod as lightly as a Newmarket-racer.—He has numberless faults in his author's meaning, and in propriety of expression ¹⁴.

MR. DRYDEN UNDERSTOOD NO GREEK NOR LATIN.

Mr. Dryden was once, I have heard, at Westminster School: Dr. Busby would have whipped him for so childish a paraphrase ¹⁵. The meanest pedant in England would whip a lubber of twelve for construing so absurdly ¹⁶. The translator is accursed Popish principles⁸. It deserved vengeance to suggest that Mr. Pope had less infallibility than his namesake at Rome⁹.

MR. POPE ONLY A VERSIFIER.

The smooth numbers of the Dunciad are all that recommend it, nor has it any other merit¹⁰. It must be owned that he hath got a notable knack of rhyming and writing smooth verse¹¹.

MR. POPE'S HOMER.

The Homer which Lintot prints does not talk like Homer, but like Pope; and he who translated him, one would swear, had a hill in Tipperary for his Parnassus, and a puddle in some bog for his Hippocrene¹². He has no admirers among those that can distinguish, discern, and judge¹³.

He hath a knack at smooth verse, but without either genius or good sense, or any tolerable knowledge of English. The qualities which distinguish Homer are the beauties of his diction, and the harmony of his versification.—But this little author, who is so much in vogue, has neither sense in his thoughts, nor English in his expression¹⁴.

MR. POPE UNDERSTOOD NO GREEK.

He hath undertaken to translate Homer from the Greek, of which he knows not one word, into mad, every line betrays his stupidity¹⁷. The faults are innumerable, and convince me that Mr. Dryden did not, or would not, understand his author¹⁸. This shows how fit Mr. Dryden may be to translate Homer! A mistake in a single letter might fall on the printer well enough, but εἰχωρ for ιχωρ, must be the error of the author: nor had he art enough to correct it at the press¹⁹. Mr. Dryden writes for the court ladies.—He writes for the ladies, and not for use²⁰.

The translator put in a little burlesque now and then into Virgil, for a ragout to his cheated subscribers²¹.

MR. DRYDEN TRICKED HIS SUBSCRIBERS.

I wonder that any man, who could not but be conscious of his own unfitness for it, should go to amuse the learned world with such an undertaking! A man ought to value his reputation more than money; and not to hope that those who can read for themselves, will be imposed upon merely by a partially and unseasonably celebrated name²². Poëtis quidlibet audendi shall be Mr. Dryden's motto, though it should extend to picking of pockets²³.

I wonder how this gentleman would look, should it be discovered that he has not translated ten verses together in any book of Homer with justice to the poet; and yet he dares reproach his fellow writers with not understanding Greek ¹⁶. He has stuck so little to his original, as to have his knowledge in Greek called in question ¹⁷. I should be glad to know which it is of all Homer's excellencies which has so delighted the ladies, and the gentlemen who judge like ladies ¹⁸.

But he has a notable talent at burlesque; his genius slides so naturally into it, that he hath burlesqued Homer without designing it ¹⁹.

MR. POPE TRICKED HIS SUBSCRIBERS.

It is indeed somewhat bold, and almost prodigious, for a single man to undertake such a work: but it is too late to dissuade, by demonstrating the madness of the project. The subscribers' expectations have been raised in proportion to what their pockets have been drained of ²⁰. Pope has been concerned in jobs, and hired out his name to booksellers ²¹.

BY AUTHORITY¹.

By virtue of the Authority in Us vested by the Act for subjecting Poets to the Power of a Licenser, We have revised this Piece; where finding the style and appellation of KING to have been given to a certain Pretender, Pseudo-Poet, or Phantom, of the name of TIBBALD²; and apprehending the same may be deemed in some sort a Reflection on Majesty, or at least an insult on that Legal Authority which has bestowed on another Person the Crown of Poesy: We have ordered the said Pretender, Pseudo-Poet, or Phantom, utterly to vanish and evaporate out of this Work; and do declare the said Throne of Poesy from henceforth to be abdicated and vacant, unless duly and lawfully supplied by the LAUREATE³ himself. And it is hereby enacted, that no other person do presume to fill the same.

DECLARATION.

WHEREAS certain Haberdashers of Points and Particles, being instigated by the spirit of Pride, and assuming to themselves the name of Critics and Restorers, have taken upon them to adulterate the common and current sense of our Glorious Ancestors, Poets of this Realm, by clipping, coining, defacing the images, mixing their own base alloy, or otherwise falsifying the same; which they publish, utter, and vend as genuine; the said Haberdashers having no right thereto, as neither heirs, executors, administrators, assigns, or in any sort related to such Poets, to all or any of them: Now We, having carefully revised this our Dunciad, beginning with the words The mighty Mother, and ending with the words buries All, containing the entire sum of One thousand seven hundred and fifty-four verses, declare every word, figure, point, and comma, of this impression to be authentic: and do therefore strictly enjoin and forbid any person or persons whatsoever to erase, reverse, put between hooks, or by any other means, directly or indirectly, change or mangle any of them. And we do hereby earnestly exhort all our brethren to follow this our example, which we heartily wish our great Predecessors had heretofore set, as a remedy and prevention of all such abuses. Provided always, that nothing in this Declaration shall be construed to limit the lawful and undoubted right of every subject of this Realm to judge, censure, or condemn, in the whole or in part, any Poem or Poet whatsoever.

To Dr. Jonathan Swift.

BOOK I.

Argument.

The Proposition, the Invocation, and the Inscription. Then the original of the great Empire of Dulness, and cause of the continuance thereof. The College of the Goddess in the city, with her private academy for poets in particular; the governors of it, and the four cardinal virtues. Then the Poem hastes into the midst of things, presenting her, on the evening of a Lord Mayor's-day, revolving the long succession of her sons, and the glories past and to come. She fixes her eye on Bayes, to be the instrument of that great event which is the subject of the Poem. He is described pensive, among his books, giving up the cause, and apprehending the period of her empire. After debating whether to betake himself to the church, or to gaming, or to party-writing, he raises an altar of proper books, and (making first his solemn prayer and declaration) purposes thereon to sacrifice all his unsuccessful writings. As the pile is kindled, the Goddess, beholding the flame from her seat, flies and puts it out, by casting upon it the Poem of Thulé. She forthwith reveals herself to him, transports him to her Temple, unfolds her arts, and initiates him into her mysteries; then announcing the death of Eusden, the Poet-Laureat, anoints him, carries him to Court, and proclaims him successor.

THE mighty mother, and her son, who brings
The Smithfield Muses to the ear of kings,

rightly understood : for the calumnies of dull authors being soon forgotten, and those whom they aimed to injure, not caring to recall to memory the particulars of false and scandalous abuse, their necessary correction is suspected of severity unprovoked. But in this case it would be but candid to estimate the chastisement on the general character of the offender, compared with that of the person injured. Let this serve with the candid reader in justification of the poet, and, on occasion, of the editor.

This Poem was written in the year 1726. In the next year an imperfect edition was published at Dublin, and reprinted at London in twelves : another at Dublin, and another at London in octavo : and three others in twelves the same year : but there was no perfect edition before that of London in quarto, which was attended with notes. We are willing to acquaint posterity, that this Poem was presented to King George II. and his Queen, by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole, on the 12th of March, 1728-9. SCHOL. VET.

It was expressly confessed in the preface to the first edition, that this Poem was not published by the author himself. It was printed originally in a foreign country. And what foreign country? Why, one notorious for blunders ; where finding blanks only instead of proper names, these blunderers filled them up at their pleasure.

The very hero of the Poem hath been mistaken to this hour ; so that we are obliged to open our notes with a discovery who he really was. We learn from the former editor, that this piece was presented by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole to King George II. Now the author directly tells us, his hero is the man —— who brings

The Smithfield Muses to the ear of kings.

And it is notorious who was the person on whom this Prince conferred the honour of the laurel.

It appears as plainly from the apostrophe to the great in the third verse, that Tibbald could not be the person, who was never an author in fashion, or caressed by the great : whereas this single characteristic is sufficient to point out the true hero ; who, above all other poets of his time, was the peculiar delight and chosen companion of the nobility of

You by whose care, in vain decried and cursed,
Still dunce the second reigns like dunce the first⁶;
Say how the goddess bade Britannia sleep,
And pour'd her spirit o'er the land and deep.

In eldest time, ere mortals writ or read,
Ere Pallas issued from the Thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all possess'd her ancient right,
Daughter of Chaos and eternal Night:
Fate in their dotage this fair idiot gave,
Gross as her sire, and as her mother grave;
Laborious, heavy, busy, bold, and blind,
She ruled, in native anarchy, the mind.

Still her old empire to restore she tries,
For, born a goddess, Dulness never dies.

England; and wrote, as he himself tells us, certain of his works at the earnest desire of persons of quality.

Lastly, the sixth verse affords full proof; this poet being the only one who was universally known to have had a son so exactly like him, in his poetical, theatrical, political, and moral capacities, that it could justly be said of him

'Still dunce the second reigns like dunce the first.'

REMARKS.

⁹⁰ Settle was poet to the city of London. His office was to compose yearly panegyrics upon the Lord Mayors, and verses to be spoken in the pageants : but that part of the shows being at length frugally abolished, the employment of City-poet ceased ; so that upon Settle's demise there was no successor to that place.

 And act, and be, a coxcomb with success:

 Remembering she herself was pertness once.

 Then gnaw'd his pen, then dash'd it on the ground,
 Sinking from thought to thought, a vast profound!
 Plunged for his sense, but found no bottom there,
 Yet wrote and flounder'd on in mere despair.
 Round him much embryo, much abortion lay,
 Much future ode, and abdicated play;
 Nonsense precipitate, like running lead,

 And suck'd all o'er like an industrious bug.

REMARKS.

¹⁰⁵ Like Tate's poor page.] Nahum Tate was Poet-laureate; a cold writer, of no invention: but sometimes translated tolerably when befriended by Mr. Dryden. In his second part of Absalom and Achitophel are above two hundred admirable lines together of that great hand, which strongly shine through the insipidity of the rest. Something parallel may be observed of another author here mentioned. W.

 There hapless Shakspeare, yet of Tibbald sore,
 Wish'd he had blotted for himself before.

¹⁴⁶ — worthy Settle, Banks, and Broome.] The poet has mentioned these three authors in particular, as they are parallel to our hero in his three capacities: 1. Settle was his brother laureat; only indeed upon half-pay, for the city instead of the court; but equally famous for unintelligible

And, lest we err by Wit's wild dancing light,
Secure us kindly in our native night:
Or, if to wit a coxcomb make pretence,
Guard the sure barrier between that and sense;
Or quite unravel all the reasoning thread,
And hang some curious cobweb in its stead!
As, forced from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
And ponderous slugs cut swiftly through the sky;
As clocks to weight their nimble motion owe,
The wheels above urged by the load below;
Me Emptiness and Dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire.
Some demon stole my pen (forgive the' offence)
And once betray'd me into common sense:
Else all my prose and verse were much the same;
This prose on stilts, that poetry fallen lame.
Did on the stage my fops appear confined?

 Or tread the path by venturous heroes trod,

 Or bid'st thou rather party to embrace?

 'Tis the same rope at different ends they twist;
 To Dulness Ridpath is as dear as Mist).²⁰²
 Shall I, like Curtius, desperate in my zeal,
 O'er head and ears plunge for the commonweal?
 Or rob Rome's ancient geese of all their glories,
 And cackling save the monarchy of Tories?
 Hold—to the minister I more incline;
 To serve his cause, O Queen! is serving thine.

He has obliged the world with many translations of French plays.' JACOB, Lives of Dram. Poets, p. 198.

Mr. Jacob's character of Mr. Ozell seems vastly short of his merits, and he ought to have further justice done him, having since fully confuted all sarcasms on his learning and genius, by an advertisement of Sept. 20, 1729, in a paper called The Weekly Medley, &c. Argument.

The King being proclaimed, the solemnity is graced with public games and sports of various kinds ; not instituted by the hero, as by Aeneas in Virgil, but for greater honour by the goddess in person (in like manner as the games Pythia, Isthmia, &c. were anciently said to be ordained by the gods, and as Thetis herself appearing, according to Homer, Odyssey XXIV. proposed the prizes in honour of her son Achilles). Hither flock the poets and critics, attended, as is but just, with their patrons and booksellers. The goddess is first pleased, for her disport, to propose games to the booksellers, and setteth up the phantom of a poet, which they contend to overtake. The races described, with their divers accidents. Next, the game for a poetess. Then follow the exercises for the poets, of tickling, vociferating, diving ; the first holds forth the arts and practices of dedicators, the second of disputants and sustian poets, the third of profound, dark, and dirty party writers. Lastly, for the critics the goddess proposes (with great propriety) an exercise, not of their parts, but their patience, in bearing the works of two voluminous authors, the one in verse, and the other in prose, deliberately read, without sleeping: the various effects of which, with the several degrees and manners of their operation, are here set forth, till the whole number, not of critics only, but of spectators, actors, and all present, fall fast asleep ; which naturally and necessarily ends the games.

of much respect, that of Mr. Edmund Curl. As a plain repetition of great actions is the best praise of them, we shall only say of this eminent man, that he carried the trade many lengths beyond what it ever before had arrived at; and that he was the envy and admiration of all his profession. He possessed himself of a command over all authors whatever; he caused them to write what he pleased; they could not call their very names their own. He was not only famous among these; he was taken notice of by the State, the Church, and the Law, and received particular marks of distinction from each.

It will be owned that he is here introduced with all possible dignity; he speaks like the intrepid Diomed; he runs like the swift-footed Achilles; if he falls, it is like the beloved Nisus; and (what Homer makes to be the chief of all praises) he is favoured of the gods: he says but three words, and his prayer is heard; a goddess conveys it to the seat of Jupiter. Though he loses the prize, he gains the victory; the great mother herself comforts him, she inspires him with expedients, she honours him with an immortal present (such as Achilles receives from Thetis, and Æneas from Venus) at once instructive and prophetic. After this, he is unrivalled and triumphant.

The tribute our author here pays him is a grateful return for several unmerited obligations: many weighty animadversions on the public affairs, and many excellent and diverting pieces on private persons, has he given to his name.

⁶¹, &c.] Something like this is in Homer, Iliad x. ver. 220. of Diomed. Two different manners of the same author in his similes are also imitated in the two following; the first, of the bailiff, is short, unadorned (and as the critics well know) from familiar life; the second, of the water-fowl, more extended, picturesque, and from rural life. The 59th verse is likewise a literal translation of one in Homer. W.

REMARKS.

If ever he owed two verses to any other, he owed Mr. Curl some thousands. He was every day extending his fame, and enlarging his writings; witness innumerable instances; but it shall suffice only to mention the Court Poems, which he meant to publish as the work of the true writer, a lady of quality; but being first threatened, and afterwards punished for it by Mr. Pope, he generously transferred it from her to him, and ever since printed it in his name. The single time that ever he spoke to C. was on that affair, and to that happy incident he owed all the favours since received from him: so true is the saying of Dr. Sydenham, 'That any one shall be, at some time or other, the better or the worse for having but seen or spoken to a good or bad man.' W.

⁷⁰ — Curl's Corinna.] This name, it seems, was taken by one Mrs. Thomas, who procured some private letters of Mr. Pope, while almost a boy, to Mr. Cromwell, and sold them without the consent of either of those gentlemen to Curl, who printed them in 12mo. 1727. He discovered her to be

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care;
 His papers light, fly diverse, toss'd in air;¹¹⁴
 Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
 And whisk 'em back to Evans, Young, and Swift.¹¹⁶
 The' embroider'd suit at least he deem'd his prey;
 That suit an unpaid tailor snatch'd away.
 No rag, no scrap, of all the beau or wit,
 That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.

Heaven rings with laughter: of the laughter vain,
 Dulness, good queen, repeats the jest again.

 He grasps an empty Joseph for a John:¹²⁸

¹²⁴ —Like Congreve, Addison, and Prior.] These authors being such whose names will reach posterity, we shall not give any account of them, but proceed to those of whom it is necessary.—Bezaleel Morris was author of some satires on the translators of Homer, with many other things printed in newspapers—'Bond writ a satire against Mr. P.—Capt. Breval was author of The Confederates, an ingenious dramatic performance, to expose Mr. P. Mr. Gay, Dr. Arbuthnot, and some ladies of quality,' says Curl, Key, p. 11. W.

¹²⁵ Mears, Warner, Wilkins.] Booksellers, and printers of much anonymous stuff.

¹²⁸ Joseph Gay.] A fictitious name put by Curl before several pamphlets, which made them pass with many for Mr. Gay's. The ambiguity of the word Joseph, which likewise signified a loose upper coat, gives much pleasantry to the idea.

And turn this whole illusion on the town.

By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade;

Of wrongs from Duchesses and Lady Maries)
Be thine, my stationer! this magic gift;
Cooke shall be Prior; and Concanen, Swift: ¹³⁸
So shall each hostile name become our own,
And we, too, boast our Garth and Addison.'

With that she gave him (piteous of his case, ¹⁴¹
Yet smiling at his rueful length of face)

REMARKS.

¹³⁸ Cooke shall be Prior.] The man here specified writ a thing called the Battle of the Poets, in which Philips and Welsted were the heroes, and Swift and Pope utterly routed. He also published some malevolent things in the British, London, and Daily Journals; and, at the same time, wrote letters to Mr. Pope, protesting his innocence. His chief work was a translation of Hesiod, to which Theobald wrote notes, and half notes, which he carefully owned. W.

¹³⁸ — and Concanen, Swift.] In the first edition of this poem there were only asterisks in this place; but the names were since inserted, merely to fill up the verse, and give ease to the ear of the reader.

He lived to the time of Queen Anne.

Virgil mentions these two qualifications of Eridanus, Georg. IV.

 In mare purpureum violentior influit amnis.'

The poets fabled of this river Eridanus, that it flowed through the skies. Denham, Cooper's Hill :

Through half the heavens he pours the' exalted urn;
His rapid waters in their passage burn.

Swift as it mounts, all follow with their eyes;
Still happy Impudence obtains the prize.
Thou triumph'st, victor of the high-wrought day,
And the pleased dame, soft-smiling, lead'st away.
Osborne, through perfect modesty o'ercome,
Crown'd with the jordan, walks contented home.

But now for authors nobler palms remain;
Room for my Lord! three jockies in his train;
Six huntsmen with a shout precede his chair:
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare.
His honour's meaning Dulness thus express'd,
'He wins this patron who can tickle best.'

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state:
With ready quills the dedicators wait;
Now at his head the dexterous task commence,
And, instant, fancy feels the' imputed sense;
Now gentle touches wanton o'er his face,

Her sister sends, her votaress from above.

REMARKS.

Richard Bentley, but of one Thomas Bentley, a small critic, who aped his uncle in a little Horace. The great one was intended to be dedicated to the Lord Halifax, but (on a change of the ministry) was given to the Earl of Oxford; for which reason the little one was dedicated to his son the Lord Harley.

²⁰⁷ — Welsted.] Leonard Welsted, author of the Triumvirate, or a Letter in verse from Palæmon to Celia at Bath, which was meant for a satire on Mr. P. and some of his friends, about the year 1718. He writ other things, which we cannot remember. Smedley, in his Metamorphosis of Scriblerus, mentions one, the Hymn of a Gentleman to his Creator: and there was another in praise either of a cellar or a garret. L. W. characterized in the treatise Ηρη Βαθους, or The Art of Sinking, as a didapper, and after as an eel, is said to be this person, by Denuis, Daily Journal of May 11, 1728.

He was also characterized under another animal, a mole, by the author of the ensuing simile, which was handed about at the same time:

‘ Dear Welsted, mark, in dirty hole,
That painful animal, a mole:
Above ground never born to grow,
What mighty stir it keeps below!
To make a mole-hill all this strife!
It digs, pokes, undermines for life.
How proud a little dirt to spread,
Conscious of nothing o’er its head!
Till labouring on for want of eyes,
It blunders into light, and dies.’

one of the Stuarts, in folio, and his Critical History of England, two volumes, octavo. Being employed by Bishop Kennet, in publishing the historians in his Collection, he falsified Daniel's Chronicle in numberless places. Yet this very man, in the preface to the first of these books, advanced a particular fact to charge three eminent persons of falsifying the Lord Clarendon's History; which fact has been disproved by Dr. Atterbury, late Bishop of Rochester, then the only survivor of them; and the particular part he pretended to be falsified produced since, after almost ninety years, in that noble author's original manuscript. He was all his life a virulent party writer for hire, and received his reward in a small place, which he enjoyed to his death. W.

²⁹¹ Next Smedley dived.] In the surreptitious editions this whole episode was applied to an initial letter E—, by whom if they meant the laureat, nothing was more absurd, no part agreeing with his character. The allegory evidently demands a person dipped in scandal, and deeply immersed in dirty work; whereas Mr. Eusden's writings rarely offended but by their length and multitude, and accordingly are taxed of nothing else in Book I. v. 102. But the person here mentioned, an Irishman, was author and publisher of many scurrilous pieces, a Weekly Whitehall Journal, in the year 1722, in the name of Sir James Baker; and particularly whole volumes of Billingsgate against Dr. Swift and Mr. Pope, called Gulliveriana and Alexandriana, printed in octavo, 1728. He was author of several dull and dead scurrilities in the British and London Journals, and in a paper called the Speculatist. In a pamphlet, called A Supplement to the Profound, he dealt very unfairly with our poet, not only frequently imputing to him Mr. Broome's verses (for which he might indeed seem in some degree accountable, having corrected what that gentleman did,) but those of the Duke of Buckingham and others: to this rare piece somebody humorously caused him to take for his motto De profundis clamavi. He was since a hired scribbler in the Daily Courant, where he poured forth much Billingsgate against the Lord Bolingbroke and others; after which, this man was surprisngly promoted to administer justice and law in Jamaica.

³¹³ Arnall.] William Arnall, bred an attorney, was a perfect genius in this sort of work. He began under twenty, with furious party papers; then succeeded Concanen in the British Journal. At the first publication of the Dunciad, he prevailed on the author not to give him his due place in it, by a letter professing his detestation of such practices as his predecessors. But since, by the most unexampled insolence, and personal abuse of several great men, the poet's particular friends, he most amply deserved a niche in the temple of Infamy: witness a paper called The Free Britain; a Dedication entitled, To the Genuine Blunderer, 1732, and many others. He writ for hire, and valued himself upon it; not indeed without cause, it appearing that he received 'For Free Britons, and other writings, in the space of four years, no less than ten thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven pounds six shillings and eight-pence out of the Treasury.' But frequently, through his fury or folly, he exceeded all the bounds of his commission, and obliged his honourable patron to disavow his scurrilities.

 As Hylas fair was ravish'd long ago.

I weigh what author's heaviness prevails ;
Which most conduce to sooth the soul in slumbers,
My Henley's periods, or my Blackmore's numbers ;
Attend the trial we propose to make :
If there be man who o'er such works can wake,
Sleep's all-subduing charms who dares defy,
And boasts Ulysses' ear with Argus' eye ;
To him we grant our amplest powers to sit
Judge of all present, past, and future wit ;
To cavil, censure, dictate, right or wrong,
Full and eternal privilege of tongue.'

Soft creeping words on words the sense compose,
 At every line they stretch, they yawn, they doze.
 As to soft gales top-heavy pines bow low
 Their heads, and lift them as they cease to blow;
 Thus oft they rear, and oft the head decline,
 As breathe, or pause, by fits, the airs divine.
 And now to this side, now to that they nod,
 As verse, or prose, infuse the drowsy god. [397

REMARKS.

³⁹⁷ Thrice Budgel aim'd to speak.] Famous for his speeches on many occasions about the South Sea scheme, &c. 'He is a very ingenious gentleman, and hath written some excellent epilogues to plays, and one small piece on Love, which is very pretty.' Jacob's Lives of Poets, Vol. II. p. 289. But this gentleman since made himself much more eminent, and personally well known to the greatest statesmen of all parties, as well as to all the courts of law in this nation. W.

³⁹⁹ Toland and Tindal.] Two persons, not so happy as to be obscure, who writ against the religion of their country. Toland, the author of the Atheist's Liturgy, called 'Pantheisticon,' was a spy in pay to Lord Oxford. Tindal was author of the Rights of the Christian Church, and Christianity as old as the Creation. He also wrote an abusive pamphlet against Earl S—, which was suppressed while yet in MS. by an eminent person, then out of the ministry, to whom he showed it, expecting his approbation. This Doctor afterwards published the same piece, mutatis mutandis, against that very person. W.

⁴⁰⁰ An allusion to a famous sermon of Bishop Hoadley's.

As what a Dutchman plumps into the lakes,
 One circle first and then a second makes,
 What Dulness dropp'd among her sons impress'd
 Like motion from one circle to the rest :
 So from the midmost the nutation spreads,
 Round and more round, o'er all the 'sea of heads.'⁴¹⁰
 At last Centlivre felt her voice to fail ;⁴¹¹
 Motteux himself unfinish'd left his tale ;
 Boyer the state, and Law the stage gave o'er ;⁴¹³
 Morgan and Mandeville could prate no more ;⁴¹⁴

REMARKS.

⁴¹¹ — Centlivre.] Mrs. Susannah Centlivre, wife to Mr. Centlivre, Yeoman of the Mouth to his Majesty. She writ many plays, and a song (says Mr. Jacob, vol. i. p. 32) before she was seven years old. She also writ a ballad against Mr. Pope's Homer, before he began it. W.

⁴¹³ Boyer the state, and Law the stage gave o'er.] A. Boyer, a voluminous compiler of annals, political collections, &c.—William Law, A. M. wrote with great zeal against the stage ; Mr. Dennis answered with as great. Their books were printed in 1726. W.

⁴¹⁴ Morgan.] A writer against religion, distinguished no otherwise from the rabble of his tribe than by the pompousness of his title, of a Moral Philosopher. W.

⁴¹⁴ — Mandeville.] Author of a famous book, called The Fable of the Bees ; written to prove, that moral virtue is the invention of knaves, and Christian virtue the imposition of fools ; and that vice is necessary, and alone sufficient to render society flourishing and happy. W.

 Hung silent down his never-blushing head,
 And all was hush'd, as Folly's self lay dead.⁴¹⁶

Thus the soft gifts of sleep conclude the day,
 And stretch'd on bulks, as usual, poets lay.
 Why should I sing what bards the nightly Muse
 Did slumbering visit, and convey to stews:
 Who prouder march'd, with magistrates in state,
 To some famed round-house, ever-open gate!
 How Henley lay inspired beside a sink,
 And to mere mortals seem'd a priest in drink:
 While others, timely, to the neighbouring Fleet
 (Haunt of the Muses) made their safe retreat?

REMARKS.

⁴¹⁵ Norton.] Norton de Foe, offspring of the famous Daniel; Fortes creantur fortibus; one of the authors of the Flying Post, (in which well-bred work Mr. P. had sometimes the honour to be abused with his betters), and of many hired scurrilities, and daily papers, to which he never set his name.

BOOK III.

Argument.

After the other persons are disposed in their proper places of rest, the goddess transports the king to her temple, and there lays him to slumber with his head on her lap ; a position of marvellous virtue, which causes all the visions of wild enthusiasts, projectors, politicians, inamoratos, castle-builders, chemists, and poets. He is immediately carried on the wings of fancy, and led by a mad poetical sibyl to the Elysian shade ; where, on the banks of Lethe, the souls of the dull are dipped by Bavius, before their entrance into this world. There he is met by the ghost of Settle, and by him made acquainted with the wonders of the place, and with those which he himself is destined to perform. He takes him to a mount of vision, from whence he shows him the past triumphs of the Empire of Dulness ; then, the present ; and, lastly, the future : how small a part of the world was ever conquered by science, how soon those conquests were stopped, and those very nations again reduced to her dominion. Then distinguishing the island of Great Britain, shows by what aids, by what persons, and by what degrees, it shall be brought to her empire. Some of the persons he causes to pass in review before his eyes, describing each by his proper figure, character, and qualifications. On a sudden the scene shifts, and a vast number of miracles and prodigies appear, utterly surprising and unknown to the king himself, till they are explained to be the wonders of his own reign now commencing. On this subject, Settle breaks into a congratulation, yet not unmixed with concern, that his own times were but the types of these. He prophesies how first the nation shall be overrun with farces, operas, and shows ; how the throne of Dulness shall be advanced over the theatres, and set up even at court ; then how her sons shall preside in the seats of arts and sciences ; giving a glimpse, or Pisgah sight, of the future fulness of her glory, the accomplishment whereof is the subject of the fourth and last book.

BUT in her temple's last recess enclosed,
On Dulness' lap the' anointed head reposed.

Him close she curtains round with vapours blue,
 And soft besprinkles with Cimmerian dew :
 Then raptures high the seat of sense o'erflow,
 Which only heads refined from reason know :
 Hence from the straw where Bedlam's prophet
 nods⁷,

He hears loud oracles, and talks with gods ;
 Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
 The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
 The maid's romantic wish, the chemist's flame,
 And poet's vision of eternal fame.

And now, on Fancy's easy wing convey'd,
 The king descending views the' Elysian shade.
 A slip-shod sibyl led his steps along,¹⁵
 In lofty madness meditating song ;
 Her tresses staring from poetic dreams,
 And never wash'd but in Castalia's streams.
 Taylor, their better Charon, lends an oar¹⁹ (Once swan of Thames, though now he sings no more) ;

REMARKS.

¹⁹ Taylor.] John Taylor the Water-poet, an honest man, who owns he learned not so much as the accident ; a rare example of modesty in a poet !

' I must confess I do want eloquence,
 And never scarce did learn my accident ;
 For having got from possum to posset,
 I there was gravel'd, could no farther get.'

He wrote fourscore books in the reign of James I. and Charles I. and afterwards (like Edward Ward) kept an alehouse in Long-acre. He died in 1654. W.

REMARKS.

²¹ Benlowes.] A country gentleman, famous for his own bad poetry, and for patronizing bad poets, as may be seen from many dedications of Quarles and others to him. Some of these anagramed his name Benlowes into Benevolus; to verify which he spent his whole estate upon them. W.

²² And Shadwell nods, the poppy, &c.] Shadwell took opium for many years, and died of too large a dose, in the year 1692. W.

²⁴ Old Bavius sits.] Bavius was an ancient poet, celebrated by Virgil for the like cause as Bayes by our author, though not in so Christianlike a manner: for heathenishly it is declared by Virgil of Bavius, that he ought to be hated and detested for his evil works: Qui Bavius non odit? whereas we have often had occasion to observe our poet's great good nature and mercifulness through the whole course of this poem. Demand new bodies, and in calf's array
 Rush to the world, impatient for the day.
 Millions and millions on these banks he views,³¹

 As thick as eggs at Ward in pillory.³⁴

Wondering he gazed, when, lo! a sage appears,
 By his broad shoulders known, and length of ears,
 Known by the band and suit which Settle wore
 (His only suit) for twice three years before:
 All as the vest appear'd the wearer's frame,
 Old in new state, another yet the same.
 Bland and familiar, as in life, begun
 Thus the great father to the greater son:
 'Oh! born to see what none can see awake!
 Behold the wonders of the' oblivious lake!
 Thou, yet unborn, hast touch'd this sacred shore;
 The hand of Bavius drench'd thee o'er and o'er.
 But blind to former as to future fate,

 Might from Bæotian to Bæotian roll?
 How many Dutchmen she vouchsafed to thrid?
 How many stages through old monks she rid?

There is a general allusion in what follows to that whole episode.

One godlike monarch all that pride confounds,
He whose long wall the wandering Tartar bounds:
Heavens! what a pile! whole ages perish there,
And one bright blaze turns learning into air.

‘Thence to the south extend thy gladden’d eyes;
There rival flames with equal glory rise;
From shelves to shelves see greedy Vulcan roll,
And lick up all their physic of the soul.

‘How little, mark! that portion of the ball,
Where, faint at best, the beams of science fall:
Soon as they dawn, from hyperborean skies
Embodied dark, what clouds of Vandals rise!
Lo! where Mæotis sleeps, and hardly flows
The freezing Tanais through a waste of snows,
The north by myriads pours her mighty sons,
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns!
See Alaric’s stern port! the martial frame
Of Genseric! and Attila’s dread name!
See the bold Ostrogoths on Latium fall;
See the fierce Visigoths on Spain and Gaul!
See where the morning gilds the palmy shore
(The soil that arts and infant letters bore)
His conquering tribes the’ Arabian prophet draws,
And saving Ignorance enthrones by laws!
See Christians, Jews, one heavy sabbath keep,
And all the western world believe and sleep!

‘Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more
Of arts, but thundering against heathen lore;
Her gray-hair’d synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head.
Padua, with sighs, beholds her Livy burn,
And e’en the’ Antipodes Virgilius mourn.
See the Cirque falls, the’ unpillar’d temple nods,
Streets paved with heroes, Tyber choked with gods;

Till Peter's keys some christen'd Jove adorn,
 And Pan to Moses lends his Pagan horn :
 See graceless Venus to a virgin turn'd,
 Or Phidias broken, and Apelles burn'd!

‘Behold yon isle, by palmers, pilgrims trod,
 Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, shod, un-
 shod, [thers,
 Peel'd, patch'd, and piebald, linsey-woolsey bro-
 Grave mummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

That once was Britain—Happy! had she seen¹¹⁷
 No fiercer sons, had Easter never been.

In peace, great goddess, ever be adored;
 How keen the war, if Dulness draw the sword!
 Thus visit not thy own! on this bless'd age
 O spread thy influence, but restrain thy rage.

‘And see, my son! the hour is on its way
 That lifts our goddess to imperial sway;
 This favourite isle, long sever'd from her reign,
 Dove-like, she gathers to her wings again.
 Now look through Fate! behold the scene she draws!¹²⁷

¹⁴⁹ Jacob.] ‘This gentleman is a son of a considerable maltster of Romsey, in Hampshire, and bred to the law under a very eminent attorney: who, between his more laborious studies, has diverted himself with poetry. ¹⁵² Horneck—Roome.] These two were virulent party writers, worthily coupled together, and, one would think, prophetically; since, after the publishing of this piece, the former dying, the latter succeeded him in honour and employment. The first was Philip Horneck, author of a Billingsgate paper called the High German Doctor. Edward Roome was son of an undertaker for funerals in Fleet-street, and writ some of the papers called Pasquin, where, by malicious insinuations, he endeavoured to represent our author guilty of malevolent practices with a great man then under prosecution of parliament.  Not touch'd by Nature, and not reach'd by Art.'

His never-blushing head he turn'd aside,
 (Not half so pleased when Goodman prophesied)
 And look'd, and saw a sable sorcerer rise,
 Swift to whose hand a winged volume flies:
 All sudden, gorgons hiss, and dragons glare,
 And ten-horn'd fiends and giants rush to war:
 Hell rises, Heaven descends, and dance on earth :²³⁷
 Gods, imps, and monsters, Music, Rage, and Mirth,
 A fire, a jig, a battle, and a ball,
 Till one wide conflagration swallows all.

Thence a new world to Nature's laws unknown,
 Breaks out refulgent, with a heaven its own:
 Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
 And other planets circle other suns.²⁴⁴
 The forests dance, the rivers upward rise,
 Whales sport in woods, and dolphins in the

 And last, to give the whole creation grace,
 Lo! one vast egg produces human race.

REMARKS.

³²⁵ On poet's tombs see Benson's titles writ! William Benson (surveyor of the buildings to his majesty King George I.) gave in a report to the lords, that their house and the Painted Chamber adjoining, were in immediate danger of falling; whereupon the Lords met in a committee to appoint some other place to sit in while the house should be taken down. But it being proposed to cause some other builders first to inspect it, they found it in very good condition. The Lords upon this were going upon an address to the king against Benson for such a misrepresentation; but the Earl of Sunderland, then secretary, gave them an assurance that his majesty would remove him, which was done accordingly. In favour of this man, the famous Sir Christopher Wren, who had been architect to the crown for above fifty years, who built most of the churches in London, laid the first stone of St. Paul's, and lived to finish it, had been displaced from his employment at the age of near ninety years. W.

Sir Christopher died in 1723, at the age of 91; and was buried under his own great fabric, with four words that comprehend his merit and his fame: 'Si quæres monumentuma, circumspice!' Walpole's Anecdotes.

³²⁶ —Ambrose Philips.] 'He was (saith Mr. Jacob) one of the wits at Button's, and a justice of the peace.' But he hath since met with higher preferment in Ireland: and a much greater character we have of him in Mr. Gildon's Complete Art of Poetry, vol. i. p. 157. 'Indeed, he confesses, he dares not set him quite on the same foot with Virgil, lest it should seem flattery, but he is much mistaken if posterity does not afford him a greater esteem than he at present enjoys.' He endeavoured to create some misunderstanding between our author and Mr. Addison, whom also soon after he abused as much. W.

BOOK IV.

Argument.

The poet being, in this book, to declare the completion of the prophecies mentioned at the end of the former, makes a new invocation ; as the greater poets are wont, when some high and worthy matter is to be sung. He shows the goddess coming in her majesty, to destroy order and science, and to substitute the kingdom of the Dull upon earth. How she leads captive the Sciences, and silences the Muses ; and what they be who succeed in their stead. All her children, by a wonderful attraction, are drawn about her ; and bear along with them divers others, who promote her empire by connivance, weak resistance, or discouragement of arts ; such as half-wits, tasteless admirers, vain pretenders, the flatterers of dunces, or the patrons of them. All these crowd round her ; one of them offering to approach her, is driven back by a rival, but she commends and encourages both. The first who speak in form are the geniuses of the schools, who assure her of their care to advance her cause by confining youth to words, and keeping them out of the way of real knowledge. Their address, and her gracious answer ; with her charge to them and the universities. The universities appear by their proper deputies, and assure her that the same method is observed in the progress of education. The speech of Aristarchus on this subject. They are driven off by a band of young gentlemen returned from travel with their tutors ; one of whom delivers to the goddess, in a polite oration, an account of the whole conduct and fruits of their travels ; presenting to her at the same time a young nobleman perfectly accomplished. She receives him graciously, and endues him with the happy quality of want of shame. She sees loitering about her a number of indolent persons abandoning all business and duty, and dying with laziness : to these approaches the antiquary Annius, entreating her to make them virtuosos, and assign them over to him ; but Mummius, another antiquary, complaining of his fraudulent proceeding, she finds a method to reconcile their difference. Then enter a troop of people fantastically adorned, offering her strange and exotic presents ; among them, one stands forth, and demands justice on another who had deprived him of one of the greatest curiosities in nature ; but he justifies himself so well, that the goddess gives them both her approbation. She recommends to them to find proper employment for the indolents before-mentioned, in the study of butterflies, shells, birds-nests, moss, &c. but with particular caution not to proceed beyond trifles, to any useful or extensive views of nature, or of the Author of nature. Against the last of these apprehensions, she is secured by a hearty address from the minute philosophers and free-thinkers, one of whom speaks in the name of the rest. The youth, thus instructed and principled, are delivered to her in a body, by the hands of Silenus; and then admitted to taste the cup of the Magus, her high priest, which causes a total oblivion of all obligations, divine, civil, moral, or rational. To these her adepts she sends priests, attendants, and comforters, of various kinds; confers on them orders and degrees; and then dismissing with a speech, confirming to each his privileges, and telling what she expects from each, concludes with a yawn of extraordinary virtue: the progress and effect whereof on all orders of men, and the consummation of all, in the restoration of Night and Chaos, conclude the poem.

YET, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
 Indulge, dread Chaos, and eternal Night!²
 Of darkness visible so much be lent,
 As half to show, half veil the deep intent.
 Ye powers! whose mysteries restored I sing,
 To whom Time bears me on his rapid wing,
 Suspend awhile your force inertly strong,
 Then take at once the poet and the song.

Now flamed the dog-star's unpropitious ray,
 Smote every brain, and wither'd every bay;
 Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bower,
 The moon-struck prophet felt the madding hour:
 Then rose the seed of Chaos, and of Night,
 To blot out order, and extinguish light,¹⁴

But held in tenfold bonds the Muses lie,
 Watch'd both by Envy's and by Flattery's eye :
 There to her heart sad Tragedy address'd
 The dagger wont to pierce the tyrant's breast ;
 But sober History restrain'd her rage,
 And promised vengeance on a barbarous age.
 There sunk Thalia, nerveless, cold, and dead,
 Had not her sister Satire held her head :
 Nor couldst thou, Chesterfield ! a tear refuse ;
 Thou wept'st, and with thee wept each gentle
 Muse.

When, lo ! a harlot form soft sliding by,
 With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye ;
 Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
 In patchwork fluttering, and her head aside ;
 By singing peers upheld on either hand,
 She tripp'd and laugh'd, too pretty much to stand ;
 Cast on the prostrate Nine a scornful look,
 Then thus in quaint recitativo spoke :

‘ O Cara ! Cara ! silence all that train :
 Joy to great Chaos ! let division reign :⁵⁴
 Chromatic tortures soon shall drive them hence,
 Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense :
 One thrill shall harmonize joy, grief, and rage,
 Wake the dull Church, and lull the ranting Stage ;
 To the same notes thy sons shall hum, or snore,
 And all thy yawning daughters cry encore.
 Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus, reigns,
 Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains.
 But soon, ah ! soon, rebellion will commence,
 If Music meanly borrows aid from Sense :

And Jove's own thunders follow Mars's drums.
Arrest him, empress, or you sleep no more'——
She heard, and drove him to the' Hibernian shore.

And now had Fame's posterior trumpet blown,
And all the nations summon'd to the throne :
The young, the old, who feel her inward sway,
One instinct seizes, and transports away.
None need a guide, by sure attraction led,
And strong impulsive gravity of head :
None want a place, for all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and cohered around.
Not closer, orb in orb, conglobed are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.

The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.
Not those alone who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause :
Whate'er of dunce in college or in town
Sneers at another in toupee or gown ;
Whate'er of mungrel no one class admits,
A wit with dunces, and a dunce with wits.

Nor absent they, no members of her state,
Who pay her homage in her sons, the great ;
Who false to Phœbus bow the knee to Baal,
Or impious, preach his word without a call.
Patrons, who sneak from living worth to dead,
Withhold the pension, and set up the head :
Or vest dull Flattery in the sacred gown,
Or give from fool to fool the laurel crown ;

And (last and worst) with all the cant of wit,
 Without the soul, the Muse's hypocrite: [side,
 There march'd the bard and blockhead side by
 Who rhymed for hire, and patronized for pride.
 Narcissus, praised with all a parson's power,¹⁰³
 Look'd a white lily sunk beneath a shower.
 There moved Montalto with superior air;
 His stretch'd-out arm display'd a volume fair;
 Courtiers and patriots in two ranks divide, [side;
 Though both he pass'd, and bow'd from side to
 But as in graceful act, with awful eye,
 Composed he stood, bold Benson thrust him by:
 On two unequal crutches propp'd he came,
 Milton's on this, on that, one Johnston's name.¹¹²
 The decent knight retired with sober rage,
 Withdrew his hand, and closed the pompous page:
 But (happy for him as the times went then)¹¹⁵
 Appear'd Apollo's mayor and aldermen,
 On whom three hundred gold-capp'd youth await,
 To lug the ponderous volume off in state.
 When Dulness, smiling—' Thus revive the wits!
 But murder first, and mince them all to bits;
 As erst Medea (cruel, so to save!)
 A new edition of old Æson gave;

REMARKS.

¹⁰³ Alluding to Dr. Middleton's laboured encomium on Lord Harvey, in his dedication of the Life of Cicero.

¹¹² Benson printed elegant editions of Dr. Arthur Johnston's Psalms; and rescued his country from the disgrace of having no monument erected to the memory of Milton in Westminster Abbey.

¹¹⁵, &c.] These four lines were printed in a separate leaf by Mr. Pope, in the last edition which he himself gave of the Dunciad, with directions to the printer to put this leaf into its place as soon as Sir T. Hanmer's Shakspeare should be published.

Let standard-authors thus, like trophies borne,
 Appear more glorious as more hack'd and torn.
 And you, my critics ! in the chequer'd shade,
 Admire new light through holes yourselves have made.¹²⁶

Leave not a foot of verse, a foot of stone,
 A page, a grave, that they can call their own ;
 But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
 On passive paper, or on solid brick.
 So by each bard an alderman shall sit,
 A heavy lord shall hang at every wit,
 And while on Fame's triumphal car they ride,
 Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side.'

Now crowds on crowds around the goddess press,
 Each eager to present the first address.
 Dunce scorning dunce beholds the next advance,
 But fop shows fop superior complaisance.
 When lo ! a spectre rose, whose index-hand
 Held forth the virtue of the dreadful wand ;
 His beaver'd brow a birchen garland wears,
 Dropping with infants' blood and mothers' tears.¹⁴²

Hor:

Some would have spoken, but the voice was drown'd
 By the French horn, or by the opening hound.
 The first came forwards with an easy mien,
 As if he saw St. James's and the Queen.
 When thus the attendant orator begun :
 ' Receive, great empress ! thy accomplish'd son ;
 Thine from the birth, and sacred from the rod,
 A dauntless infant ! never scared with God.²⁸⁴
 The sire saw, one by one, his virtues wake ;
 The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake.
 Thou gavest that ripeness which so soon began,
 And ceased so soon, he ne'er was boy nor man.
 Through school and college, thy kind cloud o'er cast,
 Safe and unseen the young Æneas pass'd :
 Thence bursting glorious, all at once let down,
 Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town.
 Intrepid then, o'er seas and lands he flew ;
 Europe he saw, and Europe saw him too.
 There all thy gifts and graces we display,
 Thou, only thou, directing all our way !
 To where the Seine, obsequious as she runs,
 Pours at great Bourbon's feet her silken sons ;
 Or Tyber, now no longer Roman, rolls,
 Vain of Italian arts, Italian souls ;
 To happy convents, bosom'd deep in vines,
 Where slumber abbots, purple as their wines ;
 To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales,
 Diffusing languor in the panting gales ;
 To lands of singing, or of dancing slaves, [waves ;

But chief her shrine where naked Venus keeps,
 And Cupids ride the lion of the deeps;³⁰⁸
 Where, eased of fleets, the Adriatic main
 Wafts the smooth eunuch and enamour'd swain;
 Led by my hand, he saunter'd Europe round,
 And gather'd every vice on Christian ground;
 Saw every court, heard every king declare
 His royal sense of operas or the fair;
 The stews and palace equally explored,
 Intrigued with glory, and with spirit whored;
 Tried all hors-d'œuvres, all liqueurs defined,
 Judicious drank, and greatly-daring dined;
 Dropp'd the dull lumber of the Latin store,
 Spoil'd his own language, and acquired no more;
 All classic learning lost on classic ground;
 And last turn'd air, the echo of a sound!
 See now, half-cured, and perfectly well-bred,
 With nothing but a solo in his head;
 As much estate, and principle, and wit,
 As Jansen, Fleetwood, Cibber, shall think fit;³²⁶
 Stolen from a duel, follow'd by a nun,
 And, if a borough choose him not, undone;
 See, to my country happy I restore
 This glorious youth, and add one Venus more.

Her too receive, (for her my soul adores)
 So may the sons of sons of sons of whores ³³²
 Prop thine, O empress! like each neighbour throne,
 And make a long posterity thy own.
 Pleased, she accepts the hero, and the dame
 Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame.

Then look'd, and saw a lazy, lolling sort,
 Unseen at church, at senate, or at court,
 Of ever-listless loiterers, that attend
 No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.
 There too, my Paridell! she mark'd thee there,
 Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair, ³⁴²
 And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
 The pains and penalties of idleness.
 She pitied! but her pity only shed
 Benigner influence on thy nodding head.

But Annius, crafty seer, with ebon wand,
 And well-dissembled emerald on his hand,
 False as his gems, and canker'd as his coins,
 Came, cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio
 Soft as the wily fox is seen to creep, [dines.

 Fierce as a startled adder, swell'd and said,
 Rattling an ancient sistrum at his head:

 True, he had wit to make their value rise;
 From foolish Greeks to steal them, was as wise;
 More glorious yet, from barbarous hands to keep,
 When Sallee rovers chased him on the deep.
 Then taught by Hermes, and divinely bold,
 Down his own throat he risk'd the Grecian gold,

Fair from its humble bed I rear'd this flower, ⁴⁰⁵
 Suckled and cheer'd, with air, and sun, and shower.
 Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,
 Bright with the gilded button tipp'd its head.
 Then throned in glass, and named it Caroline!
 Each maid cried, charming! and each youth, divine!
 Did Nature's pencil ever blend such rays,
 Such varied light in one promiscuous blaze?
 Now prostrate! dead! behold that Caroline:
 No maid cries, charming! and no youth, divine!
 And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust
 Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust.
 O punish him, or to the' Elysian shades

 He ceased, and wept. With innocence of mien
 The' accused stood forth, and thus address'd the ‘O! would the sons of men oncé think their eyes

 And reason given them but to study flies !
 See Nature in some partial narrow shape,
 And let the Author of the whole escape :
 Learn but to trifle ; or, who most observe,
 To wonder at their Maker, not to serve !’

‘ Be that my task (replies a gloomy clerk,
 Sworn foe to mystery, yet divinely dark ;
 Whose pious hope aspires to see the day
 When moral evidence shall quite decay,
 And damns implicit faith, and holy lies,
 Prompt to impose, and fond to dogmatize :)
 Let others creep by timid steps, and slow,
 On plain experience lay foundations low,
 By common sense to common knowledge bred,
 And last, to Nature’s cause through Nature led.
 All-seeing in thy mists, we want no guide,
 Mother of arrogance, and source of pride !
 We nobly take the high prior road,
 And reason downward, till we doubt of God ;
 Make Nature still encroach upon his plan,
 And shove him off as far as e’er we can :
 Thrust some mechanic cause into his place,
 Or bind in matter, or diffuse in space :
 Or, at one bound o’erleaping all his laws,
 Make God man’s image ; man, the final cause ;
 Find virtue local, all relation scorn,
 See all in self, and but for self be born ;
 Of nought so certain as our reason still,
 Of nought so doubtful as of soul and will,

O hide the God still more! and make us see
Such as Lucretius drew, a god like thee:
Wrapp'd up in self, a god without a thought,
Regardless of our merit or default.
Or that bright image to our fancy draw,
Which Theocles in raptured vision saw,
While through poetic scenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves;
That Nature our society adores,
Where Tindal dictates, and Silenus snores!⁴⁹²

Roused at his name, up rose the bowzy sire,
And shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire;
Then snapp'd his box, and stroked his belly down;
Rosy and reverend though without a gown.
Bland and familiar to the throne he came,
Led up the youth, and call'd the goddess dame.
Then thus: 'From priestcraft happily set free,
Lo! every finish'd son returns to thee:
First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same;
Bounded by Nature, narrow'd still by art,
A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
Thus bred, thus taught, how many have I seen,
Smiling on all, and smiled on by a queen!
Mark'd out for honours, honour'd for their birth,
To thee the most rebellious things on earth;
Now to thy gentle shadow all are shrunk,
All melted down in pension or in punk!

REMARKS.

By Silenus was meant Mr. Thomas Gordon, who translated Tacitus in an affected, hard manner.

 Poor W, nipp'd in Folly's broadest bloom,
 Who praises now? his chaplain on his tomb.
 Then take them all, O take them to thy breast;
 Thy Magus, goddess! shall perform the rest.'

With that a wizard old his cup extends,⁵¹⁷
 Which whoso tastes, forgets his former friends,⁵¹⁸
 Sire, ancestors, himself. One casts his eyes
 Up to a star, and like Endymion dies:
 A feather, shooting from another's head,
 Extracts his brain, and principle is fled;
 Lost is his God, his country, every thing;
 And nothing left, but homage to a king!
 The vulgar herd turn off to roll with hogs,
 To run with horses, or to hunt with dogs;
 But, sad example! never to escape
 Their infamy, still keep the human shape.

But she, good goddess, sent to every child
 Firm impudence, or stupefaction mild;
 And straight succeeded, leaving shame no room,
 Cibberian forehead, or Cimmerian gloom.

REMARKS.

⁵¹⁷ —his cup—Which whoso tastes, &c.] The cup of self-love, which causes a total oblivion of the obligations of friendship or honour, and of the service of God or our country; all sacrificed to vain-glory, court-worship, or the yet meaner considerations of lucre and brutal pleasures. Which no one looks in with another's eyes :
But as the flatterer or dependant paint,
Beholds himself a patriot, chief, or saint.

On others Interest her gay livery flings,
Interest, that waves on party-colour'd wings :
Turn'd to the Sun, she casts a thousand dyes,
And, as she turns, the colours fall or rise.

Others the syren sisters warble round,
And empty heads console with empty sound.
No more, alas ! the voice of Fame they hear,
The balm of Dulness trickling in their ear.
Great C, H, P, R, K*,
Why all your toils ? your sons have learn'd to sing
How quick ambition hastes to ridicule :
The sire is made a peer, the son a fool.

On some, a priest succinct in amice white

Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,

Knight lifts the head ; for what are crowds undone,
To three essential partridges in one ?
Gone every blush, and silent all reproach,
Contending princes mount them in their coach.

Next bidding all draw near on bended knees,
The queen confers her titles and degrees.
Her children first of more distinguish'd sort,

Or issue members of an annual feast.
Nor pass the meanest unregarded, one

The last, not least in honour or applause,
Isis and Cam made doctors of her laws.

Then, blessing all, ' Go, children of my care !
To practise now from theory repair.
All my commands are easy, short, and full :

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.
Perhaps more high some daring son may soar,
Proud to my list to add one monarch more ;
And nobly conscious, princes are but things
Born for first ministers, as slaves for kings,
Tyrant supreme ! shall three estates command,
And make one mighty Dunciad of the land !'

More she had spoke, but yawn'd—All Nature
nods :

What mortal can resist the yawn of gods ?
Churches and chapels instantly it reach'd :
(Saint James's first, for leaden Gilbert preach'd) ⁶⁰⁸
Then catch'd the schools ; the hall scarce kept awake ;

The convocation gaped, but could not speak :
Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While the long solemn unison went round :
Wide and more wide it spread o'er all the realm ;
E'en Palinurus nodded at the helm :
The vapour mild o'er each committee crept ;
Unfinish'd treatis in each office slept ;
And chiefless armies dozed out the campaign ;
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

REMARKS.

⁶⁰⁸ Gilbert Burnet, Bishop of Salisbury, who had in a rude manner attacked Dr. King, of Oxford, whom Pope much respected.

O Muse ! relate, (for you can tell alone,
 Wits have short memories, and dunces none)

 Whose heads she partly, whose completely bless'd;
 What charms could faction, what ambition, lull,
 The venal quiet, and entrance the dull ; [wrong—
 Till drown'd was sense, and shame, and right, and
 O sing, and hush the nations with thy song !

* * * * *

In vain, in vain—the all-composing hour
 Resistless falls : the Muse obeys the power.
 She comes ! she comes ! the sable throne behold
 Of Night primeval, and of Chaos old !
 Before her, Fancy's gilded clouds decay,
 And all its varying rainbows die away.
 Wit shoots in vain its momentary fires,
 The meteor drops, and in a flash expires.
 As one by one, at dread Medea's strain,
 The sickening stars fade off the' etherial plain ;
 As Argus' eyes, by Hermes' wand oppress'd,⁶³⁷
 Closed one by one to everlasting rest ;
 Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
 Art after art goes out, and all is night.
 See skulking Truth to her old cavern fled,
 Mountains of casuistry heap'd o'er her head !

Philosophy, that lean'd on Heaven before,
Shrinks to her second cause, and is no more.
Physic of metaphysic begs defence,
And metaphysic calls for aid on sense !
See mystery to mathematics fly !
In vain ! they gaze, turn giddy, rave, and die.
Religion, blushing, veils her sacred fires,
And unawares Morality expires.
Nor public flame, nor private, dares to shine ;
Nor human spark is left, nor glimpse divine !
Lo ! thy dread empire, Chaos ! is restored ;
Light dies before thy uncreating word :
Thy hand, great Anarch ! lets the curtain fall :
And universal darkness buries all.
